NEW ANTHEM IS SUNG AT ST PAUL'S

THE FIRST official rendition of God Save The King marked the end of an emotional celebration of the life of the late Queen and the beginning of the reign of King Charles.

At a packed thanksgiving service held yesterday at St Paul's Cathedral, The Bishop of London, The Rt Revd and Rt Hon Dame Sarah Mullally, said Her Majesty had "been this nation's unerring heartbeat".

Prime Minister Liz Truss, Chancellor Kwasi Kwarteng and the Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir Lindsay Hoyle were among the 2,000-strong crowd who attended the service, led by the Dean Designate, Revd Andrew Tremlett.

THE King paid a heartfelt tribute to his "darling Mama" last night and, in a historic television address, pledged his life to serving the nation as she had done.

Sitting at a mahogany desk beside a photograph of the Queen that he had chosen from Clarence House, Charles III appeared close to tears at times – praising his late mother as an inspiration and an example to all of his family.

He said: "We owe her the most heartfelt debt any family can owe to their mother; for her love, affection, guidance, understanding and example.

"To my darling Mama, as you begin your last great journey to join my dear late Papa, I want simply to say this: thank you.

"Thank you for your love and devotion to our family and to the family of nations you have served so diligently all these years."

In a final flourish borrowed from Shakespeare's Hamlet, he added:

"May 'flights of Angels sing thee to thy rest'."

His emotional address, his first to the nation and the Commonwealth as monarch, was seen by millions around the UK and right around the world.

MPs watched the speech in silence in the House of Commons chamber, some visibly wiping away tears, before applauding at the end of the address.

The nine and a half minute broadcast had been recorded earlier yesterday afternoon in the Blue Drawing Room at Buckingham Palace where the late Queen Elizabeth II delivered several of her Christmas messages.

The King echoed the vow that his mother had made on her 21st birthday – to devote his whole life, however long it may be, to service.

His Majesty added: "That prom-

"As the Queen herself did with such unswerving devotion, I too now solemnly pledge myself, throughout the remaining time honour not always accorded to the heir to the throne immediately.

He also offered an olive branch to the estranged Duke and Duchess of Sussex, expressing his "love for Harry and Meghan as they continue to build their lives overseas".

The King, dressed in a black suit, white shirt, black tie and with a black and white checked handkerchief in his breast pocket, paid tribute to his "darling wife" Camilla, the new Queen Consort.

He said: "I know she will bring to the demands of her new role the steadfast devotion to duty on which I have come to rely so much." He vowed to retain the monarchy's devotion to the Church of England and its values.

But he also set out the changes his new role will bring, confirming – as the Daily Express has reported – he will now have to distance himself from his charities which shaped much of his life as heir to the throne, and their sometimes controversial fundraising efforts, because of his new responsibilities.

The King said: "My life will of course change as I take up my new responsibilities. It will no longer be possible for me to give so much of my time and energies to the charities and issues for which I care so deeply. But I know this important work will go on in the trusted hands of others."

On the desk was a posy of sweet peas and rosemary, representing remembrance. A vase beside him with three corgis on was from his late mother's audience room.

Crisis

William, the newly appointed Prince of Wales, also takes on responsibilities for the Duchy of Cornwall and inherits his father's Scottish titles – Lord of the Isles and Duke of Rothesay.

Charles stressed that his elder son and his daughter-in-law Kate would continue their current work, which includes focusing on young people, the country's mental health crisis and giving children under five a better start in life.

The King continued yesterday: "With Catherine beside him, our new Prince and Princess of Wales will, I know, continue to inspire and lead our national conversations, helping to bring the marginal to the centre ground where vital help can be given."

One royal source said: "The couple are focused on deepening the trust and respect of the people of Wales over time."

They added: "The Prince and Princess of Wales will approach their roles in the modest and humble way they've approached their work previously."

"The new Princess of Wales appreciates the history associated with this role but will understandably want to look to the future as she creates her own path."

THE KING'S FIRST SPEECH

"I SPEAK to you today with feelings of profound sorrow. Throughout her life, Her Majesty the Queen – my beloved mother – was an inspiration and example to me and to all my family, and we owe her the most heartfelt debt any family can owe to their mother; for her love, affection, guidance, understanding and example."

"Queen Elizabeth was a life well lived; a promise with destiny kept and she is mourned most deeply in her passing. That promise of lifelong service I renew to you all today."

"Alongside the personal grief that all my family are feeling, we also share with so many of you in the United Kingdom, in all the countries where the Queen was head of state, in the Commonwealth and across the world, a deep sense of gratitude for the more than 70 years in which my mother, as Queen, served the people of so many nations."

"In 1947, on her 21st birthday, she pledged in a broadcast from Cape Town to the Commonwealth to devote her life, whether it be short or long, to the service of her peoples."

"That was more than a promise: it was a profound personal commitment which defined her whole life. She made sacrifices for duty."

"Her dedication and devotion as sovereign never wavered, through times of change and progress, through times of joy and celebration, and through times of sadness and loss."

"In her life of service we saw that abiding love of tradition, together with that fearless embrace of progress, which make us great as nations. The affection, admiration and respect she inspired became the hallmark of her reign."

"And, as every member of my family can testify, she combined these qualities with warmth, humour and an unerring ability always to see the best in people."

"I pay tribute to my mother's memory and I honour her life of service. I know that her death brings great sadness to so many of you and I share that sense of loss, beyond measure, with you all."

"When the Queen came to the throne, Britain and the world were still coping with the privations and aftermath of the Second World War, and still living by the conventions of earlier times."

"In the course of the last 70 years we have seen our society become one of many cultures and many faiths."

"The institutions of the state have changed in turn. But, through all changes and challenges, our nation and the wider family of realms – of whose talents, traditions and achievements I am so inexpressibly proud – have prospered and flourished. Our values have remained, and must remain, constant."

"The role and the duties of monarchy also remain, as does the sovereign's particular relationship and responsibility towards the Church of England – the church in which my own faith is so deeply rooted."

'As the Queen did with such unswerving devotion, I too pledge myself' time God grants me, to uphold the constitutional principles at the heart of our nation."

"And wherever you may live in the United Kingdom, or in the realms and territories across the world, and whatever may be your background or beliefs, I shall endeavour to serve you with loyalty, respect and love, as I have throughout my life."

"My life will of course change as I take up my new responsibilities. It will no longer be possible for me to give so much of my time and energies to the charities and issues for which I care so deeply. But I know this important work will go on in the trusted hands of others."

"This is also a time of change for my family. I count on the loving help of my darling wife, Camilla."

"In recognition of her own loyal public service since our marriage 17 years ago, she becomes my Queen Consort."

"I know she will bring to the demands of her new role the steadfast devotion to duty on which I have come to rely so much."

"As my heir, William now assumes the Scottish titles which have meant so much to me."

"He succeeds me as Duke of Cornwall and takes on the responsibilities for the Duchy of Cornwall which I have undertaken for more than five decades."

"Today, I am proud to create him Prince of Wales, Tywysog Cymru, the country whose title I have been so greatly privileged to bear during so much of my life and duty."

"With Catherine beside him, our new Prince and Princess of Wales will, I know, continue to inspire and lead our national conversations, helping to bring the marginal to the centre ground where vital help can be given. I want also to express my love for Harry and Meghan as they continue to build their lives overseas."

"In a little over a week's time we will come together as a nation, as a Commonwealth and indeed a global community, to lay my beloved mother to rest."

"In our sorrow, let us remember and draw strength from the light of her example."

"On behalf of all my family, I can only offer the most sincere and heartfelt thanks for your condolences and support."

"They mean more to me than I can ever possibly express. And to my darling Mama, as you begin your last great journey to join my dear late Papa, I want simply to say this: thank you."

"Thank you for your love and devotion to our family and to the family of nations you have served so diligently all these years."

"May 'flights of angels sing thee to thy rest'."

Pecking order...the King receives kisses from well wishers yesterday

By Leo
McKinstry

AS the public mourns, some words of the great poet T. S. Eliot seem appropriate for our fortunes at this hour. In the Four Quartets, he wrote: "To make an end is to make a beginning. The end is where we start from."

A long and glorious reign has come to a close. A new one, full of exciting possibilities, now opens.

Our sorrow at what we have lost in the death of our beloved Queen Elizabeth II stands alongside our hope for the future in the accession of King Charles III.

That contrast was encapsulated in the poignant scenes outside Buckingham Palace yesterday afternoon, where a huge crowd greeted the new King on his first walkabout in a mood that was both sombre and jubilant.

Conflicting emotions swirled through the throng, with well-wishers alternatively anxious to express their sympathy over his loss and eager to cheer him as he takes on his responsibilities, some even singing a chorus of God Save The King.

King Charles himself embodied the clash between grief and resolve in his majestic, moving broadcast last night. It was his first chance to introduce himself to his people as their new sovereign, and he performed magnificently, showing that he is a natural communicator whose gift for language matches his authenticity.

The raw sorrow at the departure of his "beloved mother" was all too obvious, as he praised her private warmth, humour and kindness, as well as her public devotion to duty and self-sacrifice.

"I share that sense of loss beyond measure with you all," he said.

The new King also displayed his benevolence of spirit, not only in his praise of his "darling wife" Camilla, now his Queen Consort, and the Cambridges, who now become the Prince and Princess of Wales, but also in generous mention of Prince Harry and Meghan, who caused such turmoil in the Royal Family during the Queen's last years.

The estranged couple would be foolish to reject this olive branch.

What made the King's broadcast all the more powerful was how he applied the uplifting lessons of his mother's reign to his own vision for the new era.

Referring to the late Queen's dedication and respect for "constitutional principles", he declared "that promise of lifelong service I renew today", a pledge he repeated when he told the public and Commonwealth that he would "serve you with loyalty, respect and love". Charles III has also been known for his sensitivity, but last night he combined this tenderness with a new authority. He truly came across as a man who was born to be King.

The broadcast was an extraordinary highlight in the first day of official mourning.

Feelings of duality were obvious throughout proceedings, where solemn reverence for our departed monarch mixed with a whirl of official activities to mark the arrival of the new one.

Since Thursday, the country has been coming to terms with the shock of Elizabeth II's death. Reportedly, shops in central London yesterday ran out of flowers, such as the demand from people wanting to pay their respects. The affection that she inspired was reflected in the flood of tributes that continued to be made to her.

Some of the most touching came from incongruous quarters, such as rock musician Ozzy Osbourne, who said: "With a heavy heart, I say it is devastating the thought of England without Elizabeth II."

Generous tributes were also paid in the House of Commons, by far the best of which was by Boris Johnson, who described how he "choked up" when he had to pre-record an obituary for BBC.

Adding to the solemnity were 96-gun salutes – one round for each year of her life – across with country, led by the Royal Horse Artillery in Hyde Park. Even at the end of her life, the Queen proved her remarkable capacity for bringing people together. As a mark of respect, militant trade unions, such as the train drivers' RMT, called off their forthcoming strikes, part of a wave of cancellations that included the TUC annual conference and the football's Premier League.

Yet the central feature of the British monarchy is its continuity.

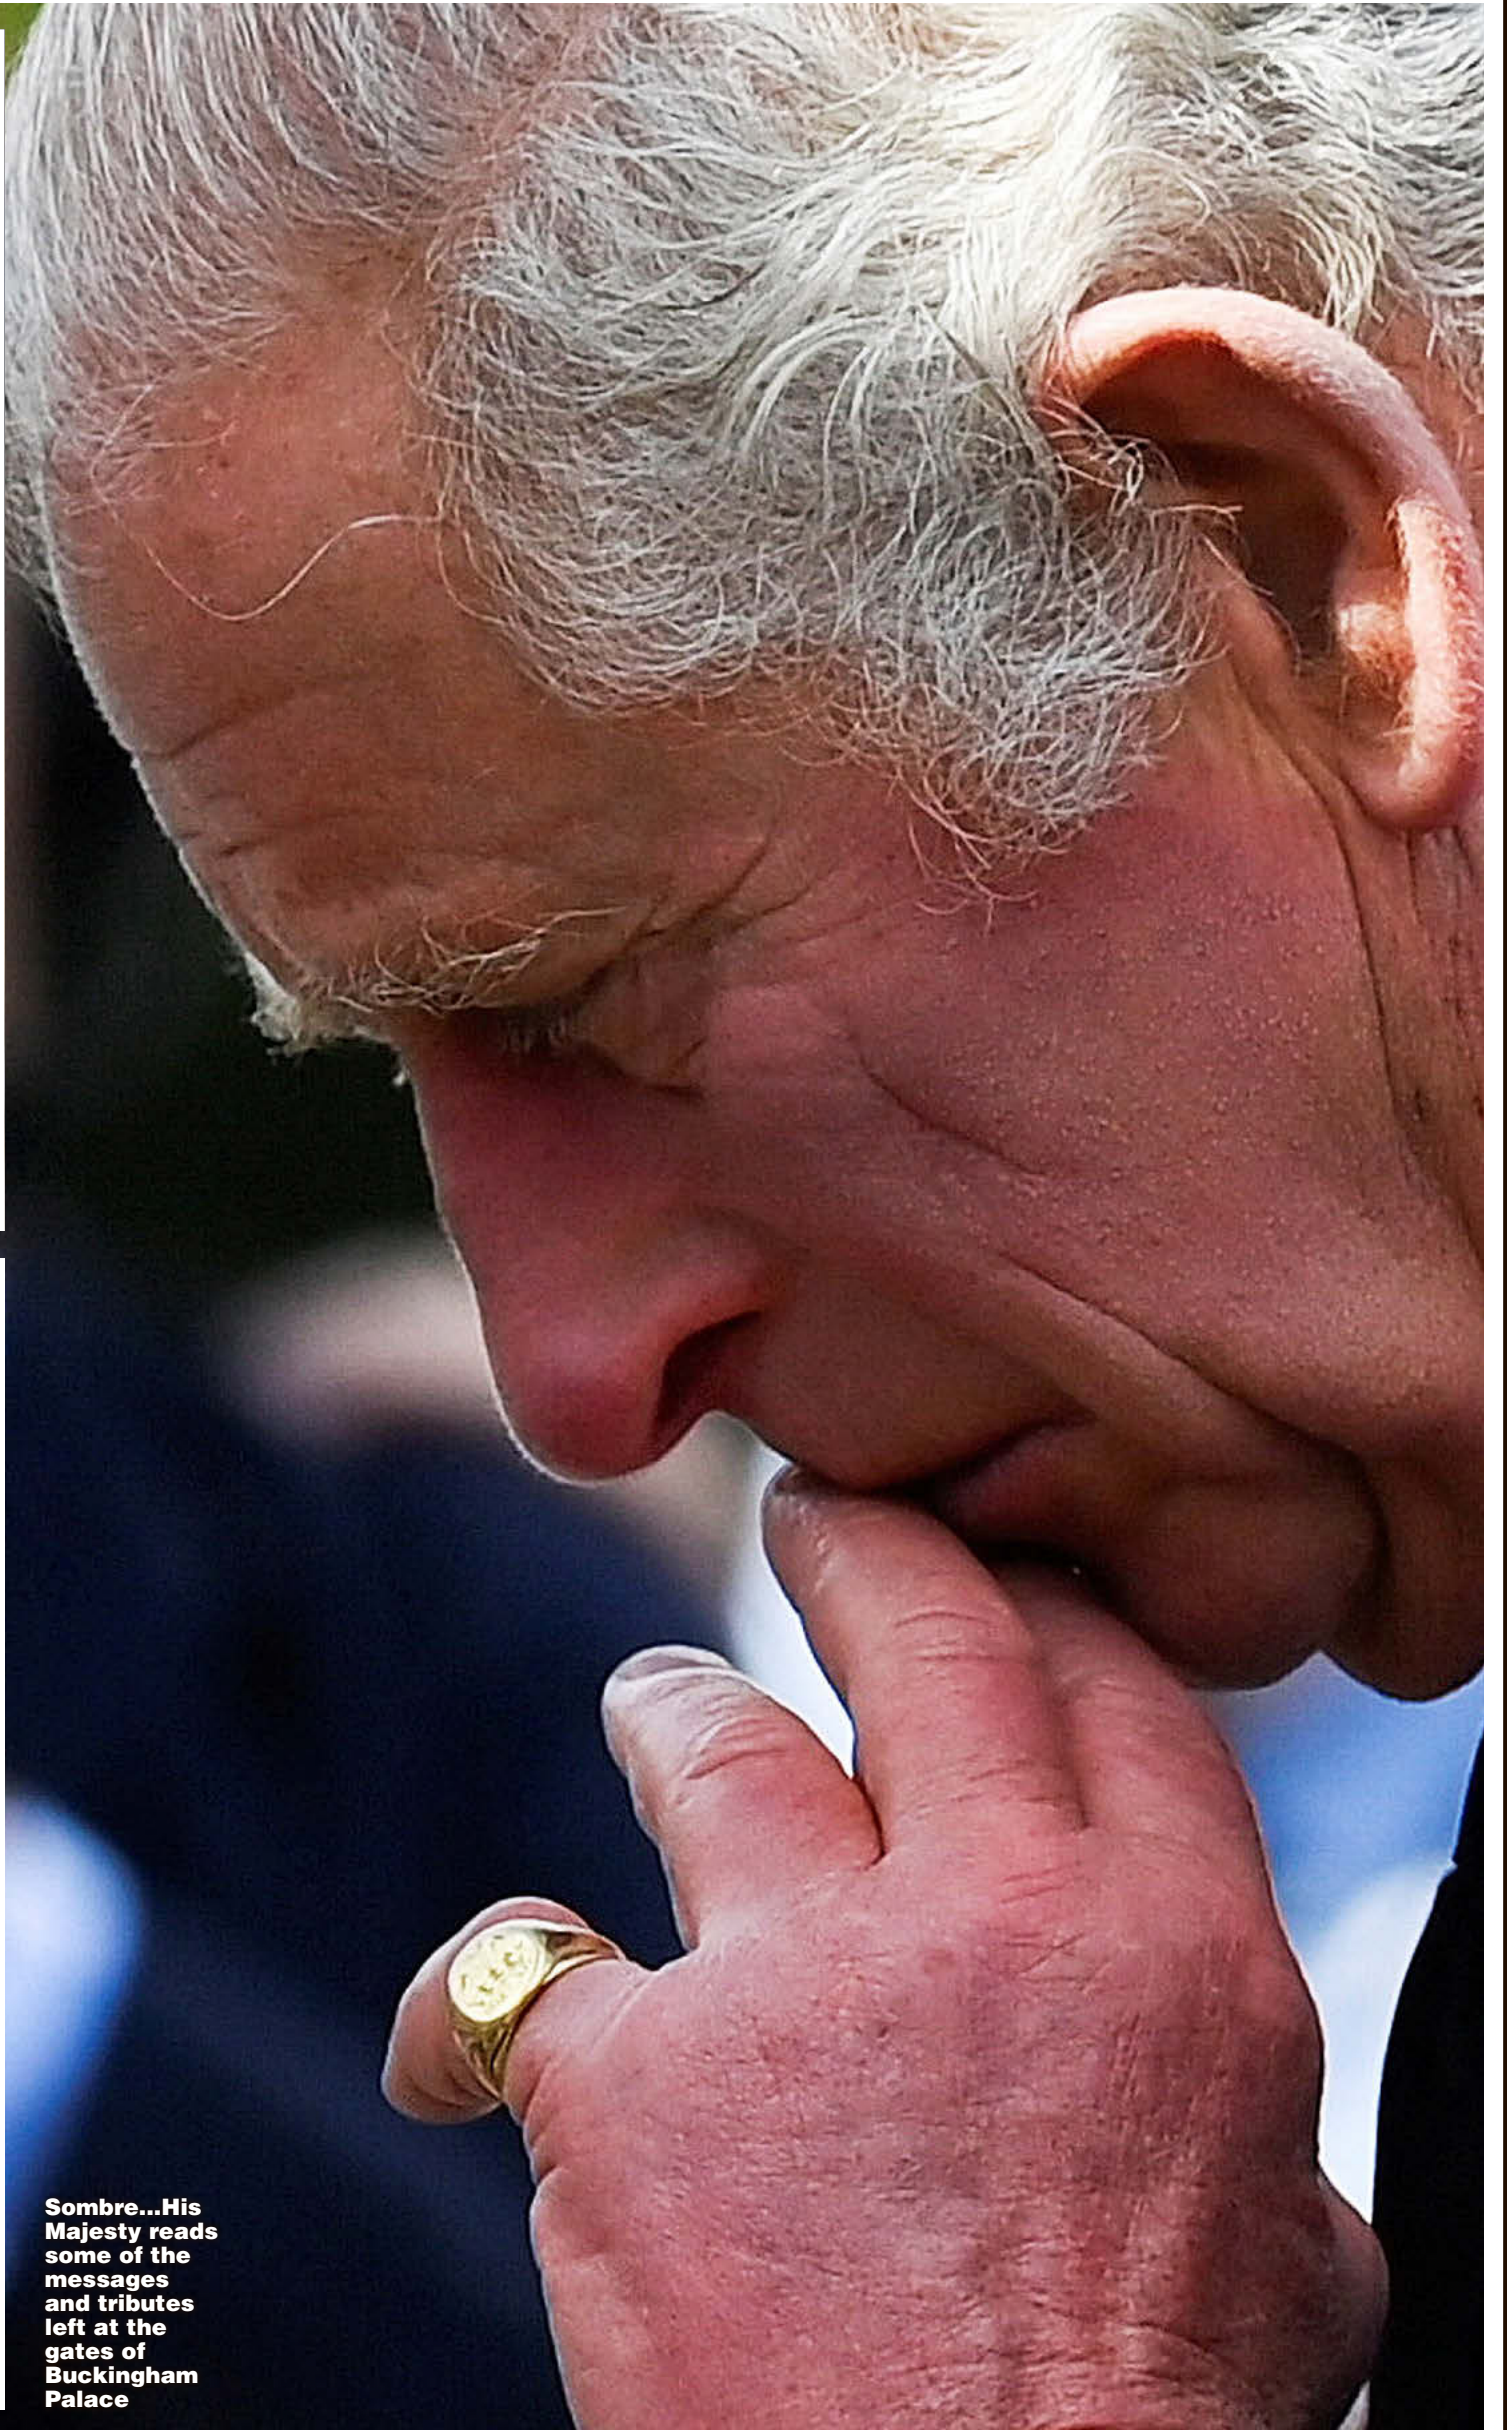

Alongside preparations for the Queen's lying in state and the funeral, which will require Scotland Yard to mount the biggest security operation in its history, there is the bustle of formalities to mark the new reign.

Today, the Accession Council, an ancient body that has its roots in the Privy Council, will meet in the august surroundings of St James's Palace in Whitehall, to swear in Charles III, a step that will be followed by the formal public proclamation of his accession by the Garter King of Arms, accompanied by a fanfare from three trumpeters.

Even before these events, Charles has already made an impressive start as the new sovereign, which reinforces how well equipped he is to wear the crown.

Both his broadcast and his walkabout in front of the Palace graphically displayed his capacity to connect with the public. There is no doubt that he will make a fine King.

At 73, he is by far the oldest monarch to ascend to the throne, but that long wait means he brings a wealth of experience and knowledge to the role.

Immersed for decades in British public life since 1958, he will not be daunted by his new duties, which include close liaison with the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, at Buckingham Palace, he held his first audience with Liz Truss, who has been in her job only two days longer than him. The signs are he will build a strong working relationship with her as they embark on the task of leading our country.

As Prince of Wales, he sometimes strayed into political controversy over architecture, the environment, and agriculture, but his views generally turned out to be justified.

Indeed, he is a man of remarkable insight and intelligence, who manages, as he put in his speech, to combine a "belief in progress with a love of tradition".

Those attitudes will help shape his reign, as shown in his reported desire to make the Royal Household "more entrepreneurial" and to slim down the size of the monarchy.

The end of his mother's magnificent reign could have been a time of uncertainty or upheaval. But with Charles III at the helm, the future of the Crown is assured.

HOW times have changed.

Charles III was out and about among his subjects yesterday – and while the grief for his mother was intense, so, too, was the affection for the new King.

The crowds cheered, took photos on their phones and burst out into spontaneous renditions of God Save The King. Even a decade ago, this would not necessarily have been the case.

Prince Charles, as was, has endured a very tempestuous relationship with the public.

First he was sweet little Charles, the schoolboy, and in his 20s, the playboy Prince and most eligible man in the world. In the early days of his first marriage, he was a father of two adorable princes and husband of a beautiful young wife. He seemed to embody the contented family man.

But we all know what happened there. Happy family life was anything but and in the wake of the divorce and Diana's tragic death, his popularity plummeted to such an extent, it seemed a danger to the future of the monarchy.

'He must have asked himself many times, "Will I be loved too?"'

It was suggested that the line of succession should change, with the crown going straight to Prince William.

In fact, the first person to suggest publicly that Charles should not be king was Diana herself, in that infamous Panorama interview. He must have asked himself many times, "Will I be loved too?"

But time is a great healer. The public came to accept that while Charles had made mistakes, as do we all, he was emphatically not a bad man.

He was years ahead of his time when it came to issues like the environment, the Prince's Trust has helped thousands of disadvantaged individuals and he palpably loves his sons.

He also palpably loves Camilla – and their relationship has clearly given him the security that will stand him in such good stead.

We British forgive and forget. We acknowledge sincerity and his clear wish to fulfil his duty.

We are also monarchists. The republican movement in this country has always been tiny and it was sheer wishful thinking on the part of those who said that when the Queen passes, so will the monarchy.

Above all, this was the reception for her son that the Queen would have wanted.

Long live the King.

Tears, cheers and

IT was a royal walkabout unlike any other, full of tears at the loss of the Queen but overwhelming support for the new King.

Hours after sitting at his mother's bedside as she passed away at Balmoral, grieving Charles was thrust firmly back into the spotlight.

He and Camilla, now Queen, flew back from Aberdeen to meet their subjects for the first time.

Kissing

They put on brave faces for the well-wishers outside Buckingham Palace.

Some were crying while others were cheering.

Charles was greeted by kisses and shouts of "God save the King" as he shook hands with members of the public and scanned the gathering mass of flowers outside the gates.

entered the Palace for the first time as King, kissing his hands on the spur of the moment.

He replied saying: "Oh thank you so much, I've been dreading this day, I've been dreading this, thank you so much all of you."

The royal couple arrived in a Rolls-Royce, stopping at the Palace gates and immediately headed towards the crowds outside.

Camilla, dressed in a black Fiona Clare dress and coat, looked distraught at times.

Red-eyed and hollow-cheeked, she wept as she greeted well-wishers, clearly bereft.

But the King, wearing a black suit and tie, was a picture of composure.

From the Palace's point of view, the change in reign is as much about presenting the new King to his people as it is about mourning the loss of his mother. So scenes such as this were always part of the bigger plan.

The King was surrounded by police bodyguards and Clarence House staff, including his equerry and the Earl of Rosslyn, his Master of the Household.

He was also accompanied by his private secretary, Sir Clive Alderton. He must have shaken hundreds of hands along the length of the Palace forecourt.

"We wish you success," one person shouted, while another said: "Thank you Charles, God bless you."

Another woman grabbed his arm and said: "Good luck my darling, you are a good man." The King, determined to meet as many people as possible, could be heard saying: "We have wonderful memories."

THEY are the living, breathing embodiment of the Britain she had nurtured for 70 years, seven months and two days.

One well-wisher told him: "We love you Charles and we loved your mum," amid claps and cheers in the crowd.

Camilla spoke to others but very few called her Your Majesty. Seeing her distress, however, she shouted our their encouragement and condolences: "We love you Camilla, we are so sorry for your loss."

As the King reached the end of the line after a 15-minute walkabout a shout of "Three cheers for the King, hip hip hooray," echoed across the street.

The King turned and looked for his wife, who soon caught up with him, still weeping, and they walked together the length of the front of the palace to view the floral tributes and gifts that had been left.

In one touching moment Charles put his arm around his wife.

They stopped at a flag bearing a picture of the late Queen, speaking quietly to each other, before finally walking through the opened wrought iron black gates and then under the arch into the Palace quadrangle.

As they did, they were saluted by Acting Chief Inspector Victoria Kneale, who was in charge of the police operation.

The No 7 Company Coldstream Guards provided a bugle salute.

They had vanished from sight, but the memories lived on.

Visitor Emma Spreckley, 43, had travelled with her friend Jacqueline Southwick, 55, from their homes in Mitcham, south London.

She was sympathetic to the grieving King. She said: "He looked a bit shocked, I suppose he is, as it's your mum at the end of the day.

"And now he's here shaking people's hands and trying to, I suppose, get through it as best he can."

In reference to the thousands there to pay their respects to the late Queen, Jacqueline added "Seeing all this, he's got the support of the nation."

Film director Raynald Leconte,

47, from New York, said he was lucky enough to speak to the King and Queen outside Buckingham Palace.

"It was quite a moment," he added. "I said, 'condolences'.

"He said, 'really, really thank you very much. And to his wife I wished her good luck and she said, 'thank you very much'. I think she said, 'I'll need it'."

Desley Jones, 52, and her husband Steven, 53, from north Wales, had been there for three hours. She said: "We told the King that we were so sorry for his loss and he thanked us."

Sarah Styles from Northern Ireland said she told him: "Bless you and we love you."

The 57-year-old added: "I just felt I really needed to come down and pay my respects to the Queen and tell him that he is loved and supported."

With rain between occasional sunshine, well-wishers were adamant their 40-minute wait to file around the Palace perimeter wall was a duty they had to fulfil.

timeless. You just thought she would be with us for ever.

"Even though she is not, she will be in our hearts. To me, she was what made being British so special and I find this magical."

Lynnette Oldham, 64, on holiday with husband Kevin from Auckland in New Zealand, said: "She was so gracious, she has just been such an amazing leader of the Commonwealth."

Rachel Green brought son Jack, four, to lay a Paddington

She said: "The Queen was the most magnificent woman in history. She was incredible and I wanted my son to be a part of it."

Smiling... the Queen on Tuesday

The secrets behind those final photos

By Katrine Bussey

THE Queen was frail but full of smiles when Jane Barlow took the last public pictures of her.

The photographer had been dispatched to Balmoral on Tuesday to capture the moment when the monarch formally appointed Liz Truss as Prime Minister.

While waiting for the Conservative leader to arrive, Ms Barlow took some portraits.

There was small talk about the weather, with dark skies and heavy rain overhead for much of the day.

But Ms Barlow, who has been a staff photographer with the Press Association in Scotland for six years, said of the Queen: "I got a lot of smiles from her."

Ms Truss then came into the drawing room and "she greeted her with a big smile".

Ms Barlow, below, added: "It's a real privilege to be able to take that picture, an honour and a privilege. For me, the best picture was the one of the Queen on her own. And it has obviously become more significant now."

"She certainly did look more frail than when I photographed her in the summer."

The Rt Rev Dr Iain Greenshields spent last weekend at Balmoral and had dinner with the Queen on Saturday and lunch with her on Sunday, revealing that she was in "really good spirits".

The Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland called her "fabulous".

Dr Greenshields said: "She was in great form, obviously frail but absolutely on the ball."

"She was talking about her past, her love for Balmoral, her father, her mother, Prince Philip, horses, engaged with what was happening in the church and what was happening in the nation. When I left her, she was positive and I find it hard to believe in those few days things changed so much."

THE Duchess of Cornwall and Cambridge hid her emotions behind a pair of sunglasses yesterday as she left Windsor Castle.

Kate, dressed simply in black, wore pearl earrings – traditional mourning jewellery for the royals and said to represent teardrops.

She drove to pick up her children George, nine, Charlotte, seven, and Louis, four, from Lambrook School, which they joined this week.

The Duchess had remained at Windsor with the children while William rushed to Balmoral as the Queen's health failed.

By Steph Spyro

THE nation's grief was reflected across Britain as thousands of people laid floral tributes at the Queen's homes.

Emotions ran high as people arrived at the gates of Buckingham Palace, Balmoral, Sandringham and Windsor Castle.

The immense gratitude towards Britain's longest-serving monarch was immediately clear on hundreds of cards among flowers placed at the entrance of Balmoral, her private residence in the Highlands.

Paying his respects was Army veteran Angus MacDonald, 83, who recalled his "memorable" meeting with the Queen and Prince Philip at Buckingham Palace in 1976.

Daughter Lindsay Verstralen, 57, from Stonehaven in Aberdeenshire, said: "For him and other service people past and present, Queen and country weren't just words."

"It was deeds, honour, service, sacrifice and duty."

Former factory manager Margaret Harrison, 68, and her husband Norman, 76, shed tears as they left a bouquet of pink roses.

Margaret said: "She's gone through what every other normal family has gone through 'Queen epitomised the great in Great Britain'

– divorces, scandals – but she's dealt with it and kept her dignity." One card summed it up, saying she "epitomised the great in Great Britain".

For Windsor locals, the Queen was not only a leader but a neighbour after her apartments at the Castle became her main residence for the final two years of her life.

Val Pratley, 60, said: "It's almost childlike that we thought she was always going to be there."

"I can't imagine a world without the Queen. Living in Windsor she felt like such a part of our lives." She recalled the Queen having to do an emergency stop while out driving when Val's brother, now in his 60s, was a toddler and got in the way."

She said: "My parents would laugh about it. They said she was so charming and so apologetic."

Among those paying their respects was four-year-old Atlas Kelly, carrying a pink rose.

Also laying flowers was Tara Glyn, 54, from Kings Langley, Herts. She said: "She's all we have known. It's like losing our grandmother." Her friend Joanna Wootton, 51, added: "Everything will change – stamps, the national anthem. It just doesn't feel natural to me."

At Sandringham yesterday a downpour did little to dampen spirits.

Two-year-old Phoenix Child clutched a Paddington Bear as he laid a bouquet of flowers at the gates, encouraged by his grandmother Dolores McKenna.

Gardener Hilary-Fay Mellor, who laid a bouquet, said: "She was such a remarkable woman and she was the same age as my mum. That generation were just quite extraordinary.

Her son Seth Mellor, 23, recalled the Queen visiting his school when he was a child.

He said: "To take that time just to come to a primary school and shake hands with an 11-year-old, that shows she was a woman of the people."

"In a sort of sad way in a time when a lot of us are sort of divided in a lot of different ways, it has brought our country together."

Cabinet's meeting honours monarch

By Sam Lister

CABINET ministers met yesterday to honour the Queen's service to the nation with a moment of silence.

The newly installed senior team shared stories about their encounters with the late monarch during the private meeting at No 10.

Ministers went on to hold meetings with the Royal household and police officials as arrangements were made for the Queen's funeral.

The Cabinet is also working out how to deal with general government business during the period of national mourning.

Parliament will be suspended after two days of tributes and only emergency business can be announced.

Reassured

No 10 insisted the energy price freeze to keep typical family bills capped at £2,500 would still go ahead on October 1 as planned.

But other parts of the £150billion rescue plan – announced by the new Prime Minister, Liz Truss, just hours before the Queen's death – will be put on hold.

This will include the publication of a report on fracking safety, it was said.

A Downing Street spokesman said: "The public should be reassured that the energy price guarantee will be in place for households from October 1 as planned."

"We are working urgently now on the wider aspects of the policy to ensure it can be delivered."

"As it stands, we do not believe the mourning period would impact on delivery of the policy."

LIZ Truss said King Charles III will lead the country forward to a "new era of hope and progress" as they met for private talks.

Just one day after becoming King and three days after Ms Truss entered No 10, the first of what will be their weekly meetings was staged at Buckingham Palace.

It followed a telephone call on the night of the Queen's death, where the Prime Minister expressed her condolences for Charles's loss.

Ahead of the meeting of around 30 minutes, Ms Truss spoke of the "awesome responsibility" the King carries "for all of us".

She said: "Even as he mourns, his sense of duty and service is clear. He has already made a profound contribution through his work on conservation, education and his tireless diplomacy."

"We owe him our loyalty and devotion. The British people, the Commonwealth and all of us in this House will support him as he takes our country forward to a new era of hope and progress, our New Carolean age."

"The Crown endures. Our nation endures. And in that spirit, I say: God save the King."

Leading the tributes to the Queen

'We send our deepest sympathy to all of the Royal Family' in a crowded Commons chamber, the Prime Minister said: "In an instant, yesterday, our lives changed forever."

"Today we show the world we do not fear what lies ahead. We send our deepest sympathy to all members of the Royal Family."

"We pay tribute to our late Queen and we offer loyal service to our new King."

Since the Queen's death there has been a "heartfelt outpouring of grief", the Prime Minister told MPs, who held a minute's silence. She said: "Crowds have gathered, flags have been lowered to half-mast, tributes have been sent from every continent around the world."

"On the death of her father George VI, Winston Churchill said the news had 'stilled the clatter and traffic of 20th-century life in many lands'."

"Now, 70 years later, in the tumult of the 21st century, life has paused again."

"Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth II was one of the greatest leaders the world has ever known."

The Prime Minister said the Queen had devoted herself to the Union and the 15 countries she served as head of state and added: "She bequeaths a modern, dynamic nation that has grown and flourished under her reign."

Ms Truss recalled how the Queen helped to rally the nation during the first Covid lockdown.

The monarch gave a moving address to the nation promising "we will meet again" and insisting "we will succeed – and that success will belong to every one of us".

The PM said: "Her words of wisdom gave us strength in the most testing times. During the darkest moments of the pandemic, she gave us hope that we would meet again."

"She knew this generation of Britons would be as strong as any."

"As we meet today, we remember the pledge she made on her 21st birthday to dedicate her life to service. The whole House will agree: never has a promise been so completely fulfilled. Her devotion to duty remains an example to us all."

Ms Truss said the Queen brought the monarchy into people's lives and homes, particularly with her decision to give televised Christmas messages.

"She was loved and admired by people across the United Kingdom and across the world. One of the reasons for that affection was her sheer humanity. She reinvented the monarchy for the modern age."

She went on: "She was dignified but not distant. She was willing to have fun, whether on a mission with 007 or having tea with Paddington Bear. She brought the monarchy into people's lives and into people's homes."

Earlier Ms Truss chaired a special meeting of the Cabinet, and she also signed a book of condolence at No 10, writing: "She was the rock on which modern Britain was built."

Today, the Prime Minister and the Cabinet will attend the Accession Council, when Charles III is formally proclaimed monarch.

They will then have an audience with the King.

WELBY: SHE WAS JOYFUL AND NEVER LOST HOPE

THE Queen "never lost hope", even in darker moments, the Archbishop of Canterbury Justin Welby has said.

The Church of England leader praised the late monarch's devotion to public service – saying many people will feel that "part of our lives we've taken for granted as being permanent is no longer there".

He told BBC Breakfast: "She was joyful, she was humorous, her life was full. But she never, even in bad moments, lost hope. I obviously spoke to her after the death of the Duke of Edinburgh...and there was just a solidity of hope in her life."

Of her effect on the public, he added: "[She] could go into a room full of people or walk down a crowded street, and everyone she spoke to felt that they were the only person there. Everybody got her attention."

Boris: I choked up when asked to make tribute

By Sam Lister

BORIS Johnson praised the Queen as the "greatest statesman of all" who showed how to "give, love and serve".

The former prime minister paid an emotional tribute in the Commons to "Elizabeth the Great" for her service.

He revealed how, when asked "a few months ago" to speak about the Queen in the past tense by the BBC, he had to stop the interview.

Mr Johnson explained: "I simply choked up and I couldn't go on. I am really not easily moved to tears but I was so overcome with sadness I had to ask them to go away."

He said that on Tuesday the Queen "saw off" her 14th prime minister and welcomed in her 15th, adding: "She was as radiant and knowledgeable and fascinated by politics as ever I can remember and as wise in her advice as anyone I know, if not wiser."

Mr Johnson told how during the 2012 Olympics she was delighted at being told a leader of a Middle Eastern country seemed to believe she had parachuted in a pink dress into the stadium.

He added: "I remember her equal pleasure on being told she had been a smash hit in her performance with Paddington Bear."

The comments came as MPs and peers began two days of Parliamentary tributes.

Lord Blunkett, who is blind, recalled how the Queen came to his aid after he faced the wrong way as he knelt during a royal audience.

The peer said: "Her Majesty, in a gracious and careful and never patronising way, managed to gently – by touching my arm – shift me round."

Wise Queen was 'very acute judge'

By Michael Knowles

THERESA May said audiences with the "immensely knowledgeable" Queen were the only meetings where everything would remain private.

The former prime minister told Radio 4's Today they involved "talking about the affairs of the day, in a sense tapping into her wisdom and that knowledge she had from her great experience".

She added the monarch would pass on the knowledge she had of "a lot of the people that I was dealing with". Mrs May, who left office in 2019, said: "She was a very acute judge of people and was able often to give those little pen portraits of people that she knew."

"Sometimes it was not just the individual but a history of that individual, of her experiences of particular countries, particular issues."

Of the Queen's warm nature, she said: "There was often that twinkle in the eye, and that magnificent smile that would break out and that made so many feel at ease."

Marie Curie
Bereavement

AT Marie Curie, we're deeply saddened by the news of the death of Her Majesty the Queen, Elizabeth II.

Our thoughts and sympathies are with her family and friends – including His Majesty the King, Charles III.

Many people will be surprised by their own reactions over the coming days and weeks, and by the nation's outpouring of grief.

When someone so prominently in the public eye dies, the emotional vulnerability we experience as individuals can be overwhelming. Times of collective grief may naturally trigger emotions and memories around grief from losses in your own life.

After the death of someone close, it can be normal to feel guilty for grieving in public. You may feel embarrassed that others may judge you – so may wear an "I'm okay" mask in public.

But when a public figure has died and the whole nation is openly grieving, it gives us "permission" to feel sad, shed tears and grieve – not necessarily for the public figure, but for our own losses which we have been taken back to.

It can feel like a time when it's unusually socially acceptable to be openly sad and to talk about your own life losses.

Loss

Seeing repeated mentions in the news makes the language of loss and visual reminders about death very present.

Others may be sharing their sadness and talking about their experiences – both in your personal circles and on TV, radio and social media.

This may naturally trigger emotions and memories around grief from losses in your own life.

This outpouring of emotions will hit all ages. Young children across the UK will have done school projects on the Queen and celebrated her Jubilee year in June.

Hearing that she has died, they may well have lots of questions, pick up on the emotions of adults around them and feel sad.

A time of national or collective grief can be an important moment in our lives. Witnessing and experiencing grief around us at this time may, in the event of any future personal loss, encourage an openness in an individual's expression of grief.

96-gun salutes to

Tributes...at Cardiff Castle, above, and from the walls of Edinburgh Castle

By Giles Sheldrick
Chief Reporter

A VOLLEY of 96-round gun salutes rang out at 1pm yesterday across Britain and at saluting stations abroad to mark the Queen's death.

The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery used six First World War-era 13-pounder field guns in Hyde Park while the Honourable Artillery Company performed the salute at the Tower of London.

Shots also rang out from Cardiff Castle, Edinburgh Castle, Northern Ireland's Hillsborough Castle, at Portsmouth, York and on Gibraltar. One round was fired every 10 seconds – 96 marking one for every year of the Queen's glorious life.

Gun salutes – traditionally fired as a sign of respect or welcome – marked the passing of Queen Victoria in 1901, the death of war-time PM Sir Winston Churchill in 1965 and of the Queen's husband Philip last year.

A period of official mourning is being observed by members of the Royal Family, household staff and representatives and troops on ceremonial duties until seven days after the Queen's funeral, which is expected to be held on September 19.

Thousands of her grieving loyal subjects gathered to pay their respects outside the Queen's residences including Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle and Balmoral – where she died on

The Church of England sent out guidance urging clerics to toll the bells and open for prayer following the Queen's death. Bells also pealed at landmarks including Westminster Abbey, St Paul's and Windsor Castle at midday, using muffles to create a more solemn sound.

Other sites in the tribute included cathedrals in Glasgow, Leeds and Manchester as well as the Queen's much-loved Crathie Kirk near Balmoral. Most of the country's 16,000 churches had not rung muted bells since her father George VI died in 1952.

Parliamentary business has all but been postponed in the run-up to the Queen's state funeral. That is Thursday afternoon. Tens of thousands of floral tributes and handwritten cards were placed outside and there was a rush for 2,000 tickets for last night's service of prayer and reflection at St Paul's Cathedral. Church bells rang for an hour around the country to pay tribute.

All football is cancelled as a mark of respect

By Chris Riches

ALL FOOTBALL fixtures in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland have been postponed following the Queen's death.

Ten Premier League, six Scottish Premiership fixtures, EFL games and six Women's Super League fixtures were among those to be called off.

The National League, FA Trophy and grassroots football were cancelled too.

Event organisers decided to halt most sport this weekend following calls with Government officials yesterday morning.

Yesterday's play at golf's PGA Championship was put off along with all horse racing and cricket's Test between England and South Africa. The racing returns tomorrow but rugby union's Premiership season will begin today after two fixtures yesterday were postponed.

The Great North Run will go ahead tomorrow as planned with organisers saying it is "an opportunity to come together and express our condolences while celebrating the life of our extraordinary Queen".

The FA said: "Her Majesty the Queen was a long-standing patron and has left an indelible legacy on our national game."

Flags at Wembley and St George's Park, England's training ground, will fly at half-mast over the weekend.

FA chair Debbie Hewitt said: "We all agree this was the right thing to do to pay our respects."

But former England striker Peter Crouch, 41, questioned the decision and suggested that matches could have served as a tribute to the monarch.

He tweeted: "I know it's only a game and some things are much bigger but imagine if all our games went ahead."

"Black armbands, silences, national anthem, Royal band playing etc to the millions around the world watching? Isn't that a better send-off?"

Cricket will resume today and Sunday's Formula One Italian Grand Prix will go ahead as scheduled with a minute's silence expected to be observed before the race.

MEMORIAL GARDEN SET UP FOR FLORAL TRIBUTES AS POLICE INCREASE PATROLS

A MEMORIAL flower garden has been created close to Buckingham Palace for people to pay their respects to the Queen.

The Cabinet Office, which issued guidance yesterday to mourners, has said an area in Green Park will be the main spot for floral tributes in order to keep the Palace gates clear.

In Windsor, flowers can be laid at Cambridge Gate on the Long Walk close to the castle.

At Balmoral, where Her Majesty died on Thursday, flowers can be placed at the main gate.

And at Sandringham, the place where the Queen would spend Christmas, officials will direct mourners to a spot for tributes.

Buckingham Palace said: "Making a donation to one of Her Majesty's many charities and patronages may be considered a fitting way of paying tribute to her extraordinary legacy." And while officials said there were no physical books of condolences at royal residences, an online book is on the Royal Family website.

However, there are books at town halls across the country for the public to sign.

A number of roads are to be closed in Westminster to manage crowds expected at the Palace.

At the same time Scotland Yard has said more officers will be posted at key locations such as transport hubs and royal parks and residences. The Met Police said: "We will be keeping people safe with highly visible patrols across London."

The Cabinet Office added: "We recognise many people will travel to Buckingham Palace and other royal residences as a mark of their respect."

"We expect large crowds, which can pose risks to safety and delays on some transport."

likely to be a public holiday in the form of a day of mourning.

Tens of thousands of events have been cancelled as a mark of respect, including this weekend's Premier League and EFL football games, while books of condolence have been opened across all four nations of the UK by hundreds of council.

Some high street firms did not open yesterday including Liberty, French Connection and Selfridges.

The Met Office said that it would supply only daily, not longer-term, forecasts during the official mourning period.

Pauses in public life including the postponement of sport and community events triggered some criticism, angering people who had paid for travel and tickets. One online user wrote: "Cancelling football? Other events? We've had lockdowns. Let people mourn how they choose."

"Did you see the West Ham fans [on Thursday night] singing the national anthem? That's far more powerful than closures."

SENIOR royals spent a day of quiet reflection at Balmoral yesterday where the Queen's body rested following her death.

The Earl and Countess of Wessex, the Princess Royal and the Duke of York were among members of the family who grieved at the private castle in Aberdeenshire.

Members of the Royal Family had made a desperate dash to the monarch's Scottish Highlands residence on Thursday. Charles was at his mother's bedside before she died, travelling with wife Camilla from their nearby Birkhall home.

The Queen's coffin has been placed in the ballroom of the castle for family and members of staff to pay their respects.

Ghillies Ball. It is thought the Queen's coffin – which is draped in the Royal Standard – will remain at Balmoral for another 24 hours before it is driven to Edinburgh where members of the family will hold a vigil in the coming days.

The journey from Balmoral will take some five hours as it passes through towns and villages, watched by mourners gathered along the route.

Procession

The coffin will then rest overnight in the oak-panelled Throne Room at the Palace of Holyroodhouse – the monarch's official residence when in the Scottish capital.

The next day it is set to be taken in a procession along the Royal Mile in the heart of Edinburgh's old town to historic St Giles' Cathedral, where it will remain at rest for 24 hours.

Members of the Royal Family, including King Charles and the Queen Consort, are expected to process behind the hearse.

The Vigil of the Princes will then take place with the Queen's children standing guard at the coffin.

It will then be transferred to a plane and flown to London by the RAF on a military aircraft, ahead of preparation for lying-in-state for four days.

Her Majesty will be brought to Westminster Hall from Buckingham Palace in a slow procession, accompanied by a military parade and members of the Royal Family.

The public will be able to watch the procession as it passes through the streets and big screens broadcasting events are likely to be set up in London's Royal Parks.

Once the coffin is placed in position in the hall, a short service will be held. Afterwards the public will be allowed to enter.

They will be invited to file past and pay their respects in the grand hall, the oldest part of the Palace of Westminster.

Each corner of the platform will be guarded by soldiers from units that serve the Royal Household.

Carriage

The coffin will be draped with the Imperial State Crown, orb and sceptre when it remains in Westminster.

The last member of the Royal Family to lie in state in the hall was the Queen Mother in 2002, when more than 200,000 people queued to view her coffin.

The Queen's state funeral is likely to take place at Westminster Abbey on Monday, September 19, with Buckingham Palace set to confirm the date imminently.

There has not been a monarch's funeral service in the Abbey since the 18th century, although the funeral of the Queen's mother was held there in 2002.

The Dean of Westminster David Hoyle is likely to conduct the service, with the Archbishop of Canterbury Justin Welby giving the sermon.

There has been a suggestion Prime Minister Liz Truss may be called on to read a lesson.

After the ceremony, the Queen's casket will be placed on the green gun carriage used for her father, grandfather and great-grandfather and drawn in a walking procession from the Abbey to Wellington Arch, at London's Hyde Park Corner, before heading to Windsor Castle by hearse.

It will be Her Majesty's final journey, to St George's Chapel.

Members of the royal household will be waiting on the grass outside. Inside the chapel, the lift to the royal vault will descend.

The coffin will be lowered into the vault before being interred in the King George VI memorial chapel.

Prince Philip's coffin was first placed in St George's Chapel after his death in April last year, aged 99.

He lay in rest for family and invited guests to pay their respects. His coffin was taken to the royal vault within the chapel, but will now be moved to the King George VI chapel to lie beside his beloved wife and Queen.

KING Charles III's entire life has been a journey towards the moment today when he will be officially proclaimed this nation's monarch. At the age of 73, as he grieves the passing of his mother, he now takes on the role of a lifetime.

There is every reason to expect that he will be respected and loved as a kind and caring king who will pursue his vocation with the same dedication that defined Queen Elizabeth II's reign.

He has lived in the glare of flashbulbs and spotlights but also grasped every opportunity to talk with, inspire, support and encourage people who live far beyond the privileged circles in which he was raised.

The King has an intimate knowledge that few can match of our nation and its challenges. Rather than embrace the life of a jet-setter he has tirelessly sought to unlock opportunities for people who have few advantages.

The Prince's Trust, founded in 1976, has helped more than a million young people overcome often daunting obstacles and fulfil their potential. Throughout Britain, there are men and women who battled homelessness or who found themselves in trouble with the law whose lives were changed by this internationally respected charity.

Our new monarch is probably happier meeting community volunteers and young people who have started their own businesses than turning up for red carpet events. He has little interest in the glitz that comes with being a royal and is in every sense a gentleman of substance.

As the Prince of Wales he carved out a role for himself at the heart of our national life. This was no easy task when everything he did drew instant comparisons with the conduct of a cherished Queen, and when he ventured into public debates he risked both mockery and complaints that his interventions had no place in a country with a constitutional monarchy.

As the decades have passed, however, his passion for the environment and architecture that reflects Britain's heritage is no longer seen as quirky. Instead, it is now widely recognised that he was a man ahead of his times.

AT THE heart of his vision is a deep concern that we should not deny future generations treasures – whether in the natural or the built environment – which enrich our lives.

A reluctant celebrity, he has used his colossal fame to highlight the threat of climate change and done everything he can to keep the future of the planet on the political agenda. As Britain became a more pluralist nation, he strove to forge links with different faith traditions and he seeks wisdom wherever it can be found.

Politicians have taken years to realise that the greatness of a nation cannot be captured by its GDP alone. A good society will preserve the best of the past, give special attention to the most vulnerable, and champion excellence in innovation and art; our new King has spent his life doing exactly this, and it is exciting to imagine how he will continue this work as monarch. Like his mother, he will use the immense symbolic power of the Crown for the common good.

He strengthened the spirit of reconciliation in Ireland in 2015 when he shook hands with Sinn Féin's Gerry Adams, even though the IRA murdered his beloved great-uncle Lord Louis Mountbatten in 1979, and he will have a wealth of future opportunities to champion peace and forgiveness.

Successive prime ministers prized their weekly audiences with the Queen. It was a rare opportunity to speak to someone of unparalleled experience about the most vexing issues facing the nation; these are moments when a PM can speak with candour, unafraid that his or her words will leak.

Liz Truss will doubtless value such opportunities to talk with King Charles III. He will have strong opinions and unique insights that he is absolutely entitled to share, and he can also relate to the pressures that come with living under relentless scrutiny. His family's most difficult days have been subjected to forensic analysis, with romances, break-ups and tragedy documented and dramatised, and he could be forgiven for hankering after a more normal life.

But it is joyful to see the sheer pleasure at the heart of his marriage to the Queen Consort, Camilla, whom he describes as his "darling wife".

They understand one another and are true companions, alive with warmth and humour.

MOURNING: The King and Queen Consort greet the huge crowds outside Buckingham Palace yesterday rule has begun...

New responsibilities will be thrust upon their already burdened shoulders but we hope they find enjoyment and excitement in this latest chapter of Britain's royal story. Our culture is sometimes accused of worshipping the cult of youth, and it is healthy for us to have two septuagenarians in this elevated position. They will remind the country that fun, adventure and curiosity are not the sole preserve of twentysomethings.

His Majesty will want to keep up his phenomenal work rate but we hope in their travels and engagements they will have time to savour each other's company.

THEY have already given Britain so much, and they deserve happiness. We wish them many years of health, filled with opportunities to play with their grandchildren and to return to their favourite haunts in every part of the UK.

King Charles III has spent his life waiting for the moment when he would become our monarch, but no one can accuse him of having wasted his time.

He has already made Britain a better country and he will use his days on the throne to continue his predecessor's splendid tradition of selfless service.

Our King has already spoken with eloquence of his sorrow at the passing of his mother and, like any son who has suffered a bereavement, he will feel haunted by an often painful sense of loss. But he should know that when he hears the cries of "God Save the King!" the crowds are doing much more than engaging in ritual – they are cheering him on.

Throughout this land, the Commonwealth and far beyond, people have every confidence that a great King's rule has begun.

KING Charles has revealed the Royal Family will remain in mourning for the Queen over a period expected to last 17 days from today.

The nation will observe it for 10 days – officially – with the Firm's then extended for seven days beyond the funeral of Her Majesty, expected to take place on September 19.

The Royals will be joined in their mourning period by troops on ceremonial duties, Royal Household staff, and their representatives on official duties.

Their residences will close but plans are in place to allow the public to lay flowers at Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle, Sandringham, Balmoral Castle, the Palace of Holyroodhouse and Hillsborough Castle.

Flags at these were lowered to half-mast after the announcement of the Queen's death on Thursday. If the funeral takes place as expected, they will remain lowered until 8am on September 27.

A spokesman for Buckingham Palace said: "At Buckingham Palace, members of the public will be guided to lay floral tributes at dedicated sites in Green Park or Hyde Park.

"At Windsor Castle, floral tributes can be left at Cambridge Gate on the Long Walk. These flowers will be brought inside the castle every evening and placed on the castle chapter grass on the south side of St George's Chapel and Cambridge Drive.

"At the Sandringham Estate, members of the public are encouraged to leave floral tributes at the Norwich Gates.

Gun salutes to mark formal succession

By Robert Kellaway

AS LORD President of the Council, Penny Mordaunt MP will today lead around 200 members of the Privy Council and great officers of state in formally proclaiming the succession of King Charles III.

She will preside over a meeting of the Accession Council which traditionally takes place in St James's Palace as soon as possible after the death of the monarch. For the first time in history the meeting will be televised.

Those attending are expected to include Royal Family members who are Privy Counsellors, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of York, the Prime Minister, the Lord Privy Seal and the Lord Great Chamberlain.

Also attending will be the Lord Mayor and High Sheriffs of the City of London, high commissioners and senior civil servants. Attendance has been limited to 200 due to the capacity at St James's Palace. When the Queen acceded in 1952 there were 281 privy counsellors, now there are more than 700.

Oath

The council, held in the red-carpeted Entrée Room, will be divided into two parts. Firstly, the Council gathers without the King to make its proclamation.

Once the proclamation has been signed, the Lord President orders its dissemination and gives directions for gun salutes at Hyde Park and the Tower of London. The second part, just for Privy Counsellors, is within a day or two of the first. This will be Charles's first Privy Council meeting as King. He will make a personal declaration and oath.

Gun salutes are expected to be fired to coincide with the reading of the proclamation from St James's Palace at 11am today.

It will then be read in the City of London and on Sunday in Cardiff, Edinburgh and Belfast, plus other locations.

During the funeral, heads of state, prime ministers, presidents, European royals and key figures from public life will be invited to gather in the Abbey, which is expected to be packed to its capacity of 2,000.

The service will be televised, and a national two minutes of silence is expected to be held afterward.

On the same day as the funeral, the Queen's coffin will be taken to St George's Chapel at Windsor Castle for a televised committal service.

Later in the evening, there will be a private interment service with senior members of the Royal Family.

The Queen's final resting place will be the King George VI Memorial Chapel, an annex to the main chapel.

It is where her mother and father were buried, along with the ashes of her sister, Princess Margaret.

Philip's coffin will move from the royal vault to the memorial chapel to join the Queen's.

The period of national mourning will then be over.

But, for the following seven days, the period of royal mourning will continue.

It is expected to end on Tuesday, September 27 when flags return to full-mast at 8am.

Funeral plan set in place for decades

By Giles Sheldrick

DETAILED plans for the Queen's death have been meticulously planned and rehearsed for decades.

Royal funerals have long been suffixed with the word "Bridge". This was the case for Diana, Princess of Wales in 1997, The Queen Mother in 2002, and the Duke of Edinburgh, who died on April 9 last year, aged 99.

The details for Her Majesty's passing are known as Operation London Bridge.

Security services and senior officials have known the plans – which have been regularly updated – for years.

The Queen would have had a hand in its planning and preparations, but the final say on aspects of the funeral will be made by King Charles III, her son.

A state funeral is expected to be held on Monday, September 19, and will be the biggest since Sir Winston Churchill's in January 1965.

Plans made provision for the service to fall on the 10th day after her death, but because the official announcement came late on Thursday, this will be extended by one day.

It will be held at Westminster Abbey, which can hold a congregation of 2,000. It is the venue where she married dashing sailor Philip in 1947 and where he pledged to be "her liege man of life and limb" at her coronation 70 years ago.

Standstill

A vast security operation is already under way, in anticipation of mourners flooding London, as well as a potential terror threat and widespread travel disruption. It is highly likely the capital will come to a complete standstill.

It will fall to Prime Minister Liz Truss to meet the Queen's coffin, most likely at King's Cross. It will then proceed on a gun carriage to the Abbey, pulled by naval ratings – sailors – using ropes.

Senior members of the Royal Family will follow, just as they did before the funeral of the Duke of Edinburgh.

Every arm of the Armed Forces will be represented, not only in the procession, but in lining the streets.

Members of the public will be able to pay their respects as the Queen lies in state at Westminster Hall, beforehand.

The service will be conducted by the Dean of Westminster, who officiated at Prince Philip's dedication service, and it will be attended by hundreds of heads of state, political leaders, European royals and other figures.

It will be televised to a global audience of hundreds of millions and a national two minutes' silence will be observed. The Queen's coffin will then be taken to St George's Chapel at Windsor Castle for a televised committal service.

Her final resting place will be the King George VI memorial chapel where her mother and father are buried, along with the ashes of Princess Margaret.

Philip's coffin will move from the Royal Vault to this chapel to join her.

ROLE AS SENIOR ROYAL

reality it puts Beatrice, right, second in line after William, as Andrew was stood down from official duties after the Virginia Giuffre sex-abuse scandal. The Duke of York denied all allegations against him and later settled the civil case for an undisclosed sum.

Harry, meanwhile, has resigned from royal working life. In her new position, Beatrice will be authorised to carry out many of the official duties of the sovereign, according to the Royal Family website.

This includes attending Privy Council meetings, signing routine documents and receiving the credentials of new ambassadors to the UK.

Camilla's long road

By Chris Riches

FOREVER at Charles's side, Camilla has transformed from sweetheart, to royal mistress, supportive partner and now Her Majesty the Queen Consort.

Now 75, Camilla has forever been the love of our new king's life, a confidante so close that while engaged to Diana he even gave her a bracelet engraved "F" and "G" – their pet names for each other being Fred and Gladys.

Vilified by the grieving public after the tragic death of Diana in 1997, after the princess partly blamed her for the breakdown of her marriage, Camilla has suffered, defied and endured.

In an interview with Vogue earlier this year she tellingly said of the anger towards her: "I sort of rise above it and get on with it. You've got to get on with life."

The wife of 17 years to Charles she has blossomed over the years before the British public. More than accepted, she has been taken into their hearts and her cheerful, easy manner embraced and loved.

Yesterday as His Majesty The King was greeted with cheers and patriotic shouts from a huge crowd outside Buckingham Palace, cheers greeted Queen Consort Camilla too.

But life has not always been so easy for the royal couple. Decades ago it seemed their relationship was never meant to be after Charles fell for her when they met in their early 20s.

Born Camilla Rosemary Shand, on July 17, 1947, to an upper-class and well-connected family her parents would have hoped for great things from her. But not royal ambitions.

She was raised on the family's 18th-century country estate in Plumpton, East Sussex, with her father Bruce Shand, a retired Army officer, reading her bedtime stories while mother Rosalind, ferried the children to school, activities and the beach.

A Swiss finishing school prepared bubbly Camilla for being a London debutante and from the mid-1960s she enjoyed an on-off relationship with a Household Cavalry officer Andrew Parker Bowles.

In the early 1970s she was introduced to the young Prince Charles. His biographer Jonathan Dimbleby wrote: "She was affectionate, unassuming, and – with all the intensity of first love – he lost his heart to her almost at once."

But Charles was pursuing his Navy career and while on an eight-month deployment overseas in 1973, Andrew proposed to Camilla and she accepted.

Robert Lacey wrote in his book Royal: Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II that Charles met Camilla too early. Sarah Bradford wrote in her book Diana that Charles's great-uncle Lord Mountbatten arranged for him to go overseas to clear a path for him to later step out with Mountbatten's granddaughter Amanda Knatchbull.

Others claim the Queen Mother did not approve of Camilla, as she wanted Charles to marry one of the granddaughters of her close friend Lady Fermoy.

Despite her marriage, Camilla, her husband and Charles maintained their friendship. Andrew played polo with Charles, who was asked to be godfather to Tom, the Parker Bowles's first child.

In 1981 Charles had met and proposed to the young Lady Diana Spencer. In Diana: Her True Story, author Andrew Morton claimed Diana almost called off the wedding after finding the "F" and "G" bracelet Charles had made for Camilla.

Charles insisted he and Camilla only rekindled their romance when his marriage had "irretrievably broken down".

But as Diana so memorably stated on the now-shamed 1995 Panorama interview "there were three of us in this marriage".

Camilla's divorce was finalised in 1995, while Charles and Diana's marriage officially ended in 1996. After Diana's death the following year, Camilla's pariah role worsened.

Her son Tom Parker Bowles described his mother's steely fortitude as one of her greatest assets – revealing why she has been such a rock to our new monarch. Tom said in 2017: "My mother is bullet-proof."

Rehabilitating Camilla into the public's affections has been slow and cautious but determined and ultimately hugely successful – culminating in the couple's ecstatic and loving reception from well-wishers when they finally married at a civil ceremony at Windsor Guildhall in 2005.

Just a few months after their wedding, Prince Harry described his father's new bride as "wonderful woman" and added: "William and I love her to bits and get on really well with her."

Camilla's life now revolves around public engagements, royal duties and supporting her husband and her family.

Away from the spotlight she is also an enthusiastic grandmother of five. During lockdown, the then Duchess of Cornwall, spoke of her sadness at not being able to give her grandchildren a "huge hug".

Her nephew Ben Elliot told Vanity Fair magazine: "She has a very close and supportive family, and a close group of old friends."

Camilla has also used her public role to champion a number of worthy and vital causes – such as raising awareness about osteoporosis, which afflicted her mother and grandmother; crusading against domestic abuse and sexual violence; and literacy.

After her marriage to Charles, royal aides hinted that Camilla did not want to be known as Queen Consort.

She "intended" instead, when the time came, to be known as Princess Consort – a title never before used in British history.

But last February, the Queen finally sealed her own approval to her eldest son's happiness by declaring it was her "sincere wish that, when that time comes, Camilla will be known as Queen Consort".

Her Majesty chose the 70th anniversary of her accession to the throne to make that highly significant announcement, telling the nation: "When, in the fullness of time, my son Charles becomes King, I know you will give him and his wife Camilla the same support that you have given me, and it is my sincere wish that, when the time comes, Camilla will be known as Queen Consort as she continues her own loyal service."

Camilla later said she felt "very honoured and very touched" by the public seal of approval.

King Charles summed up their relationship saying: "It's always nice to have somebody on your side. She is an enormous support and sees the funny side of life."

Now as he deals with the death of his mother in a period of state mourning and also his new role as monarch, His Majesty The King will be relying on her bullet-proof support more than ever.

William's move from

As the new heir to the throne receives his father's royal titles,

Harry's tots could be called HRH and have Sussex name

THE Queen's death could mean a range of new titles for members of the Royal Family.

These include the first Prince and Princess of Sussex and a new Duke of Edinburgh.

Meghan Markle and Prince Harry's son, Archie Mountbatten-Windsor, three, is now technically a prince.

His younger sister, Lili Mountbatten-Windsor, one, is also entitled to be a princess.

The rules set out by King George V in 1917 mean Archie and Lili – as the children of a son of a sovereign – also now have an HRH style, if they choose to use it.

Meghan's refusal to give up her title as the Duchess of Sussex when she and Prince Harry moved to the US caused controversy. Time will tell if Meghan and Harry will refuse the Royal Highness titles for their children.

Archie is technically history's first Prince of Sussex and Lili the first Princess of Sussex.

Prince Edward, Queen Elizabeth's third son and youngest child, could also be set for a title change.

He is currently the Earl of Wessex. However, as long ago

By Sarah O'Grady

as 1999, on his marriage to Sophie Rhys-Jones, Buckingham Palace announced that Edward would eventually succeed his father Prince Philip as Duke of Edinburgh.

Just three months after Philip's death in 2021, it was reported that Charles was reluctant to hand the dukedom over to Edward when he becomes king.

But the announcement suggested Edward, left, would be given the title, but not until after the death of both Philip and the Queen.

If Charles takes no action, the dukedom will remain dormant and Edward will not be made the Duke of Edinburgh.

To grant it to Edward, he would need to issue a new Letters Patent – an open document from a sovereign issued under the Great Seal of the Realm.

If Edward becomes the Duke of Edinburgh, his wife the Countess of Wessex will become the Duchess of Edinburgh – a courtesy title which was held by the Queen following her marriage.

Changes ahead...Harry and Meghan with their children Archie and Lili

SO we will have to learn to call William the Prince of Wales.

That will take time, seeing as his father bore the title for almost as long as Elizabeth II was Queen.

And the title of Princess of Wales will sit gracefully on the shoulders of Kate – a true and worthy successor to Princess Diana.

King Charles, in his address to the nation, yesterday revealed he was “proud to create” his son and heir William as Prince of Wales.

The Duke of Cambridge has also become Duke of Cornwall. He inherits vast lands dating from the reign of Edward III in the Fourteenth century.

They are worth at least £1billion and include 205 square miles – or an eyepopping 0.2 per cent – of Britain's landmass. Most famously, perhaps, William's new bailiwick includes Dartmoor prison – but Duchy properties stretch all over the country: mainly in Devon and Cornwall but also out to Hereford, Somerset, Kent and far beyond.

If he was wealthy before, William is now among the world's super-rich. He is not allowed to sell his properties but will enjoy the interest from rents from them, as well as the vast sums of banking interest which come from the multi-million annual surpluses ploughed back into Duchy coffers which also directly benefit him and his family.

If this is a happy state of affairs for Cornwall's new duke, things do not look quite so rosy for his tenants. Ancient laws which apply only to the Duchy mean if a person dies in its lands without leaving a will, their estate is grabbed by William's people.

Last month a woman faced eviction from her rented property in Poundbury for having too many plants in her garden. Residents of the Dorset community may not choose their front-door paint without prior Duchy approval.

In the Scilly Isles a man claimed he had been prevented from buying out the 76-year lease on his owned property as he damned the Duchy for its “feudal” ways. Also, huge housing sites planned by (the now) King Charles in Somerset's Newton St Loe and Faversham in Kent drew protests at the loss of treasured beauty spots.

Only last year there were street protests in Truro at the lack of social housing in the Duchy.

Even the Commons' Public

Accounts Committee concluded a few years ago that the Duchy should be subject to more rigorous scrutiny by ministers.

William now inherits all these headaches and the big question is: Does he loosen the grip on Duchy tenants, bringing them into line with other individuals across Britain – or does he carry on as a “feudal” landlord? The first option – one more likely to be followed by the free-thinking prince – means he runs the risk of clashing with his father the King, who over many decades saw no reason to change ancient statutes stretching back centuries.

King Charles III is a traditionalist – William less so. But so far we have seen no direct clash between father and son over the way things should be done.

But Charles has always liked to think of himself as an innovator – building a model town like Poundbury, for example – and will watch William's husbandry of the vast estate which had been his personal train set all those years.

come to a confrontation between the new King and the new Prince of Wales?

It would not be the first time. Queen Victoria so deplored her son, the then Prince of Wales (Bertie), that she denied him access to Cabinet papers until her death, when he was 59.

King George V despised his son the Prince of Wales (David) and predicted, correctly, that he would abdicate rather than face up to his responsibilities as sovereign.

Further back, the early King Georges – I, II and III – looked on their male successors with suspicion if not downright hatred.

William's relationship with King

Charles is said to be more cordial than the ones these predecessors had but stops short, let's say, of seeing eye-to-eye.

He is still Diana's son after all and he witnessed her anguish as the marriage with his father broke down. At the time of her death Charles had become a distant father – not entirely his fault – but it was difficult for both to overcome the yawning gap which had opened up in their relationship.

That may give William the freedom to think that now he is Duke of Cornwall he can bring about changes which many of the Duchy's tenants say have been overdue for decades, if not centuries in some cases. All this is in the future. The Queen and her passing are at the forefront of everyone's minds this week – and for weeks and months to come.

But just as Charles III long ago mapped out a strategy for his reign, so too will William have carved out a plan for the Duchy.

Affairs of state will now keep Charles busy, with little time to look over William's shoulder as he brings about social change within the Duchy.

But there will come a day when father and son have a talk.

How fascinating it would be to be a fly on the wall when that finally takes place.

THE Dalai Lama led global tributes to the Queen yesterday, writing a deeply personal letter to King Charles.

The spiritual leader and former head of state of Tibet told of his “deep sadness”.

The 14th Dalai Lama, known as Gyalwa Rinpoche to his people, added: “Her reign, as Britain’s longest-serving monarch, represented celebration, inspiration and a reassuring sense of continuity for so many people alive today.

“Your mother lived a meaningful life with dignity, grace, a strong sense of service and a warm heart, qualities we all should treasure.”

Across the world, there has been an extraordinary outpouring of grief, sadness and shock over Her Majesty’s passing.

As people paid their own tributes, one sentiment was common – heartfelt thanks and gratitude for a lifetime of selfless devotion to duty.

Australia, a Commonwealth country visited 16 times by the Queen, had the sails of the iconic Sydney Opera House lit up with an image of her smiling face. She had been present when the building was opened in 1973. The tribute paid to honour her as a “model of strength and stability”.

The Nasdaq Billboard in Times Square, New York, showed a smiling picture of Her Majesty and the Empire State Building nearby by was lit up in purple.

“There has been no greater steward of the alliance of friendship and cooperation between the United States and the United Kingdom than Queen Elizabeth. Her dedication to public service is an example to us all.

“Throughout her reign, she was always received in the United States with great respect and adoration, embodying everything we love most about the British – their humour, humility and grace.

“The Queen’s life of service has been a gift, not just to her people, but to the world.”

The national flag flew at half-mast in Kuwait City, the statue of Christ The Redeemer bore the colours of the Union Jack while the Elysee Palace in Paris paraded the British flag.

The Eiffel Tower, usually illuminated, went dark in tribute and French President Emmanuel Macron signed a condolence book at the capital’s British Embassy.

Both the Union Jack and Israel’s national flag were projected on the walls of Jerusalem’s Old City.

Members of the Armed Forces in New Zealand performed a ceremonial Maori haka at the Auckland War Memorial.

In Berlin, flowers and candles were laid outside the British Embassy, while in Venice God Save The Queen was played outside the city’s Festival Buildings. The National Anthem rang out at the Venice Film Festival as Hollywood stars, including Brad Pitt and Ana de Armas arrived on the red carpet.

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said the Queen had “an obvious deep and abiding love for Canadians”. He added:

“Her steady grace and resolve brought comfort to us all. I will miss our chats where she was thoughtful, wise, curious, helpful, funny and so much more. She was one of my favourite people in the world, and I will miss her so.” Chinese President Xi Jinping offered “sincere sympathies” and added: “Her passing is a great loss to British people.”

Flags were lowered to half-mast around the world including at the Nato headquarters in Brussels, Belgium. Ursula von der Leyen, President of the European Commission, said the Queen’s “empathy and ability to connect with every passing generation, while remaining rooted in tradition that truly mattered to her, was an example of true leadership”.

Queen Margrethe II of Denmark, now the world’s only reigning female monarch, wrote to King Charles to express her condolences.

King Willem-Alexander of The Netherlands, Queen Elizabeth’s fifth cousin, said he and his Queen Maxima remembered the “steadfast and wise” monarch with “deep respect and great affection”.

Ukrainian forces paid their own unique tribute by daubing artillery shells with “RIP Queen Elizabeth II” and “Keep Calm and Carry On” as they continued their resistance against Russian forces.

In Moscow, flowers including bouquets of red roses were placed at the British Embassy.

Cartoons of lost monarch melt hearts

TOUCHING sketches of the Queen have been shared over and over on the internet. One depicts Her Majesty being reunited with Prince Philip, alongside one of her corgis, and the words "Hello again, Lilibet".

Other cartoons, based on a drawing by Eleanor Tomlinson, show the Queen in her familiar emerald green coat hand in hand with Paddington Bear with a variety of touching messages. It follows the TV sketch the pair did to mark Her Majesty's Platinum Jubilee in June. Paddington also shared a tribute on Twitter. Echoing words from the famous clip, the beloved bear said: "Thank you Ma'am, for everything."

Front pages from US to Australia pay tribute

NEWSPAPERS across the world paid tribute to the Queen in a mass outpouring of admiration and affection.

From Europe to Japan and in Commonwealth countries, front pages were filled with images of the monarch throughout the seven decades of her reign.

The New York Times, inset, was one of hundreds saying Her Majesty "projected stability in a time of dramatic change for Britain".

But the American daily newspaper with a worldwide readership also found itself at the centre of controversy for promoting an article suggesting the Queen "helped obscure a bloody history of decolonisation".

It published an opinion piece suggesting the sovereign put a "traditionalist front" on "decades of violent upheaval".

An article written by Maya Jasanoff, a Professor of History at Harvard University, went on to reflect on how people "may never learn what the Queen did or didn't know about the crimes committed in her name".

It prompted a backlash with Ben Goldsmith, a financier and brother of Tory peer Zac Goldsmith, labelling it "appalling". He said he was so outraged

But the piece was a lone voice in global coverage celebrating Her Majesty's lifetime of service.

Canada's Globe and Mail published a special commemorative section on her role strengthening the countries' "special bonds".

The Australian covered the seismic news with a picture of the monarch waving alongside the words Farewell, Our Noble Queen.

RJ HOW to describe a relationship with a woman old enough to be your mother, constantly present like your mother, who feels as safe, warm and wise as your mother – but whom you've never met? And yet every day of your life she's been there, her face as familiar to you as your own, her words of guidance eagerly looked forward to every Christmas; her wisdom, when she speaks in a crisis such as the Covid pandemic, bringing balm to your anxious heart.

But she wasn't your mother of course, nor was she ever referred to as such; she would never be "Mutt" to us as Angela Merkel was to our German counterparts. We never actually thought of the Queen as a mother figure; that would have been an impertinence. We never lost sight of her importance, her grandeur, her connection to the pomp and circumstance of state occasions, to gold coaches, guards on horseback, to glistening tiaras and the magnificent Imperial State Crown, worn each year at the State Opening of Parliament until recently, when her frail ageing body could no longer bear its weight.

We had the utmost respect for that beloved woman. She wasn't just entitled to our deference, she thoroughly deserved every curtsy.

We felt we knew her, but of course we didn't. She was so careful in her conduct, so perfectly judged. She wore bright colours because, she said, she "had to be seen to be believed". That sounds calculating, and of course everything she did was designed to show off her role, it had to be. She never minimised her national significance, but when she smiled her natural gaiety shone through. She could be deeply solemn, wearing what her grandchildren called her Miss Piggy face, but her warmth was never in question.

Can you imagine how difficult it must have been for a woman to reign as only the sixth female Sovereign since the 16th century? The prejudice she must have faced within her court and advisers, among her many successive governments and foreign heads of state? When she was crowned as a young woman she must have been aware of the doubters, of snide remarks about her sex and the weakness it implied in those days, among her own class.

How did she win our constant respect, admiration and love for so many years, across the generations? These are far from deferential times, but we only ever teased our Queen, never ridiculed her, and the public was only angry with her once: following Diana's death, when she remained at Balmoral, in her eyes protecting William and Harry, but in the opinion of her subjects showing disrespect for her former daughter-in-law's tragic death, compounding a feeling that Diana had been cruelly treated by Prince Charles in particular, and the Royal Family in general. We were both hosting our morning television show at the time, and day after day our phone-ins revealed the frustration and fury of ordinary people all over the country. Why didn't she come back to Buckingham Palace? Why wasn't the Royal Standard flying at half-mast as a sign of mourning for the Princess?

There were moments that week after Diana's death when we, talking to hundreds of viewers from our studio, felt the monarchy was in grave danger.

But as ever she paid attention. She brought Diana's boys back home to Kensington Palace, she walked with them across that tear-strewn sea of flowers and candles outside the gates. And our anger dissipated in "about half an hour," as Michael Sheen's Tony Blair told Helen Mirren's Queen in the only decent movie ever made about the Monarch, "The Queen." The restive crowds were disarmed and soothed by her presence. Their trust in her was immediately restored.

To both of us it seems easiest to understand Elizabeth II in the context of family. Because that small blood-linked team essentially explains the British Monarchy, its appeal and its weaknesses.

Yes of course, the Queen was more than a mother: there were onerous responsibilities of state, grand banquets to seal friendly relations with difficult countries, exhausting foreign tours in which she was on show, representing the essence of our nation at its brilliant best.

She had to dress perfectly, even choosing her jewellery (especially her beloved brooches) to flatter the country she was visiting. But to us, the real Queen was the woman we saw as the heart of her difficult family, ruefully admitting at a dinner to mark the 40th anniversary of her accession to the throne, that the passing year had been her "annus horribilis." That year, 1992, was horrible all right; it marked the collapse of the marriages of three of her four children – Charles to Diana, Anne to Captain Mark Phillips and Andrew to Sarah Ferguson and to cap it all, Windsor Castle almost burnt to the ground.

How fascinating that this monarch, with massive cares of state on her shoulders, should define one of the worst years of her life as the time when her children got divorced and her house burnt down.

That beautifully judged acknowledgment of her own domestic troubles made us all feel she was one of us. We may not have a castle to burn, her subjects thought, but our house was flooded in the last great storm and our kids, like hers, are having problems with their spouses.

Her more recent difficulties with grandson Harry and his American wife showed another side to the Queen. Her tact, but also her iron will. She wasn't only a monarch, but the head of her family.

It's significant that as events with Harry reached their climax when the couple were interviewed by Oprah Winfrey, Prince Philip, always the patriarch, was in declining health. We'll never know the conclusions he reached about this latest Palace scandal, but we can assume the Queen's tactful but implacable response to Harry and Meghan's complaints about their treatment by the Royal Family was fully supported by Philip.

Still, what a cross to bear while her husband was approaching death – managing an angry grandson spilling poisonous resentment about his privileged life to an eager worldwide audience. But she did it; she made clear that Harry's complaints about racism, while being seriously investigated, were open to question.

"Some recollections may vary" was her response to her grandson's accusation that unnamed royals were concerned about the colour of his unborn baby's skin. Again, such tact, such wisdom, yet such firmness. Her beloved grandson was not to be indulged. Her statement was subtle, even loving, but Harry's attempts to destroy his family and use the monarchy as a vehicle to further his new life as a California media multi-millionaire would not be tolerated. Enough was enough.

So, even when frail and aged, Elizabeth managed her family. She was our beloved, irreplaceable Queen, but always a mother and grandmother. She must have been bone weary after Philip's death, but she never complained.

She believed monarchy is sacred, but so is motherhood. She could have distanced herself from her troublesome brood, cast them aside, but she never did. They, and we, owe Elizabeth II a debt we can never repay. She was miraculous, really.

How Charles will mould the monarchy for the modern era

By Margaret James

EVERYONE will remember where they were when the death of Queen Elizabeth II was announced. Most of us will recall, too, when we first heard the words, King Charles III. But what of the man himself, Charles Philip Arthur George, who has for decades walked a step behind his mother and whose shoes he must now fill?

What sort of king will he be? Will he be a meddling monarch, or one who changes our fundamental understanding of what it is to be a modern sovereign?

After one of the longest apprenticeships in history, the former Prince of Wales has finally got the top job. King Charles III will be in his 75th year when his Coronation – not expected to be held for several months, almost certainly next year – takes place.

When he stood on the balcony of Westminster Abbey at the age of five to witness the crowning of his 27-year-old mother (she was just 25 when her father, King George VI, died), could he ever have conceived it would be an incredible seven decades until the crown passed to him? Almost certainly not.

But in those sometime turbulent intervening years, while waiting for the crown longer than any royal heir in British history, he has had a long time to prepare.

First and foremost he will be a king in a hurry.

Acutely aware of his age and the inevitable brevity of his reign compared to his mother's 70 years and 214 days on the throne, the longest of any British monarch, he will want to get cracking. Charles acknowledges he is "no longer young", but often quotes his late mentor and friend, South African-born philosopher and writer Sir Laurens van der Post, who told him that, with every passing decade, one was not ten years older but "ten years wiser".

Indeed, "the wisdom of old age" has become one of Charles's favourite phrases.

He has drawn comfort from them, too, in darker days when he fretted that he might be "too old to make much of a difference, if any difference at all" when he did finally ascend the throne. But make a difference he will, and from what he has told friends, we already have a good idea of his plans in some areas.

Underpinning his progression as king is a belief that he has to streamline the royal family in line with the zeitgeist and the will of the British people. Through his work for

The new King knows he won't have the same freedom to write his 'spidery' letters to ministers. But neither will he shy away from the long-standing causes he holds dear. If only he could come up with a way of reuniting Harry and Meghan with the royal family the youth charity The Prince's Trust, which he founded in 1976, and as patron, president or member of more than 400 other charities and organisations, King Charles has seen first hand how poverty and lack of education limit opportunities.

Where his mother had the luxury of time – and was sometimes criticised for being slow to adapt to the public mood, such as in the aftermath of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales – King Charles does not.

While his mother oversaw an unprecedented period of change, from the austere postwar years through the swinging 60s, the divisive 80s, Tony Blair's three-term New Labour era, a return to economic austerity and then the pandemic, this also enabled her to learn on the job. In her words, it was a role she was ill-prepared for at first.

"In a way I didn't have an apprenticeship, my father died much too young and so it was all a very sudden kind of taking on, and making the best job you can," she told a documentary.

"It's a question of maturing into something that one's got used to doing and accepting the fact that here you are and it's your fate. It is a job for life."

King Charles has learned at the feet of arguably history's greatest ever monarch.

His relatively short reign will magnify his desire to make his mark and like his mother, King Charles will be a dedicated and hard-working sovereign.

He has often been found asleep at his study desk at midnight after a long evening's work. Indeed, so keen is he to get going that he has been talking about a six-month sprint of activity after his coronation focusing on modernising areas of public life such as the honours system, ideas that are politically without risk and likely to receive universal approval.

He favours dropping the outdated word "Empire" in, for example, the OBE, and replacing it with the word "Excellence".

In a tribute to his mother and beloved grandmother – The Queen Mother – he would like to rename the Royal Victorian Order as the Royal Elizabethan Order. The investitures themselves could be revamped to make them more of a celebration.

"Charles finds it a shame that after receiving an honour at the palace, a big day in anyone's life, recipients simply leave. How much more appropriate for everyone it would be for the occasion to be marked by a party," he is quoted as telling a friend.

But is this in line with his desire to streamline the royal family, potentially one of the most difficult of his plans, which will require sensitive execution if he isn't to upset his siblings.

Ever since the death of Princess Diana almost exactly 25 years ago, Charles has been talking about slimming down the monarchy.

An insider revealed in 2020: "Charles has never made any secret of the fact that he wants a slimmed-down monarchy when he becomes king. He realises that the public don't want to pay for a huge monarchy."

To some extent this has happened organically without his intervention. Prince Harry removed himself from royal life and relocated to America with wife Meghan, and Prince Andrew was excluded (Charles is believed to have applied pressure) as a result of the Jeffrey Epstein scandal.

This slimmed down the invitation list for the Buckingham Palace balcony for the Platinum Jubilee flypast to just the Queen, Charles and William, plus Camilla, Kate and the three grandchildren George, Charlotte and Louis.

Pointedly, Charles had once joked that the balcony was in danger of collapse under the weight of the burgeoning extended family. But observers now noted with some sadness how empty it looked compared with previous national celebrations.

But this is Charles's vision of the royal future: in line with his rationale about protecting the monarchy for hard-pressed subjects who are as anxious to see value for money in their royal family as in other areas of public life. Those figures surrounding him, however, were always meant to include his youngest son, Harry, daughter-in-law Meghan and their children Archie and Lilibet.

How dearly King Charles would love to find a way of reuniting them all as a family.

On this, as in so many matters, Charles will consult closely with the Duke of Cornwall and Cambridge who he wants involved every step of the way on major policies that will affect William, who he created Prince of Wales yesterday, when he inherits the throne.

While some ministers have privately feared he may be a "meddling monarch", who continues to lobby politicians with his famous "spidery" hand-written letters, Charles it appears is more circumspect these days. Where once he intervened on matters as diverse as architecture and human rights, he knows those days have gone. As he said on his 70th birthday: "I'm not that stupid. I do realise that it is a separate exercise being sovereign."

Can anyone doubt, however, that his views won't be trenchantly put in private to the Prime Minister in their weekly Tuesday evening audiences? And no one seriously expects Charles to abandon longer-held interests and views on such topics as foxhunting, the NHS, grammar schools and the environment.

As the years have passed, Prince Charles has become increasingly alarmed by climate change and his passionate plea for action came as he addressed world leaders at the COP26 climate summit in Glasgow.

Like another incoming leader down the road in Downing Street, King Charles's in-tray is bulging. And where even will his in-tray be? It's been mooted the King should base himself at Windsor Castle, leaving Buckingham Palace as a kind of grand official government hotel and events centre.

Apart from the palace, he now has Windsor Castle, Sandringham House in Norfolk, Balmoral and nearby Birkhall, Scotland, on top of his own homes in London and Gloucestershire, Clarence House and Highgrove. He is understood to want to open up some royal homes to the public, not for just two months of the year as Buckingham Palace currently is, but all year round.

MENTOR: Author Sir Laurens van der Post

Balmoral Castle, where the Queen died, is earmarked to become a museum and will no longer be used as a royal residence.

Unlike his mother who was very fond of Windsor Castle, Charles is said not to want to live at the Berkshire residence because its position under the Heathrow flight path makes it "too noisy".

AT HEART Charles is a traditionalist who intends to ensure the continuity of the monarchy in his mother's image, using her tried and tested template.

It's said that his court will retain the ancient formality of curtsying, for example, but he may in time relax others aspects of the liveried dress code. All his duties will be performed with Camilla as Queen Consort at his side, a happy and unexpected clarification made by his mother on the anniversary of her 70th year as monarch.

Charles, like his mother, a practising Christian, will become Defender of Faith but having studied other religions will want his Coronation to be an ecumenical statement at which every faith in the land will be represented.

One thing unlikely to change is Charles's daily routine. An early riser, he is generally at his desk by 8.45am and if at home, aside from a brisk walk at lunchtime, remains there until dinner time. Except now his days will be punctuated by more engagements and the red boxes of government papers that arrive every afternoon.

Throughout this transformation in his life, he will keep his mother always close in his thoughts. In recent years, with a greater understanding of the pressures she was under as a young Queen, Charles and his mother had grown increasingly close.

As he takes on the role, he will feel firsthand what an onerous responsibility it is to be Sovereign. With no prospect of Jubilee parties, Charles will have to rely on his character and wisdom to harness the respect, loyalty and affection of the British people.

Yet with the love the British people hold for his mother in their hearts, the goodwill is there for the success of King Charles III's reign.

TURBULENT AND BLOODY TIMES OF EARLIER MONARCHS WHO BORE THE NAME CHARLES

CHARLES III is the first King with that name since the 1600s and shares it with two monarchs who reigned during one of the most turbulent periods in British history.

The new monarch chose his Christian name as his official name, breaking with tradition like his mother before him.

The reigns of father and son Charles I, inset, and Charles II spanned 1625 to 1685 and saw the overthrow and restoration of the monarchy, the Great Fire of London and the plague.

Charles I was the only British king to have been publicly executed, while Charles II – known as the Merry Monarch – spent nine years in exile, fathering a dozen illegitimate children.

Charles was an unpopular king whose reign saw the temporary downfall of the monarchy and establishment of an English republic for 11 years.

when he married the Catholic Bourbon Princess Henrietta Maria of France in 1625 and argued with parliament, which wanted to curb his powers.

He fought the armies of the English and Scottish parliaments but was defeated in 1645 and captured. After a brief period of escape, he was recaptured and executed in Whitehall in 1649.

His son Charles II was proclaimed King of Scotland but was defeated by Oliver Cromwell at the Battle of Worcester in 1651 before fleeing to Europe where he spent nine years in exile. Following Cromwell's death in 1658, parliament proclaimed Charles II king and in 1660 invited him to return.

Charles II fled London's plague in 1665 but the next year, he helped fight the Great Fire of London. He had no legitimate heirs, but had 12 children by seven mistresses.

The great royal rebranding... changes afoot for post boxes, stamps, coins and even QCs

By Jane Warren

FOR 70 years, her regal profile has been part of the branding of our everyday lives. From every sterling cash purchase to each stamp we have popped on an envelope, the Queen's visage has been a reassuring presence telling us who we are.

Travel abroad and she's with you too, thanks to her appearance in the passports that prove our identity as British citizens. Her face features on pillar boxes, police helmets and in the legal and religious language that we use. But all these enduring symbols of public life – and plenty more besides – will have to be unpicked from the fabric of national life across the UK and Commonwealth, and changed to the name and image of her heir King Charles III.

It won't be a speedy transition. There are 4.5 billion sterling bank notes in circulation with the Queen's face on them, worth a combined £80 billion. In time, these will be replaced with alternatives featuring an image of the new King, and the older ones removed from circulation.

This process is likely to take at least two years. When the latest plastic £50 notes were issued, the recall and replacement process took 16 months. Here we look at some of the other things that will change.

After 70 years of steadiness, the altering of many enduring symbols of our everyday lives will reflect the fact Britain once again has a king

FACE VALUE: Images on coins and notes will gradually change to those of the King

STAMPS

Since 1967, all stamps issued by Royal Mail have featured an embossed silhouette of the side profile of Queen Elizabeth II.

These will no longer be produced – although they can still be used on letters and parcels. Charles may already have sat for the sculptures or portraits that will form the basis of his image on new stamps, but he will still have to approve the designs.

COINS

All 29 billion coins in circulation in the UK have the Queen's head on them. The most recent design dates from 2015, when she was 88 years old – the fifth coin portrait minted during her reign.

The Royal Mint won't say when it will start issuing coins with King Charles III's head on them, but it has always been commonplace to have different monarchs in your wallet as the changeover in coins happens organically rather than through recall. There will be one key change, however. While the Queen faces right on coins, the new King will face left. This alternation of successive monarchs is a 17th-century tradition.

PASSPORTS

All British passports are issued in the name of Her Majesty and are still valid for travel, but for new passports, the wording on the inside of the front cover will be updated to His Majesty. Her Majesty's Passport Office will become His Majesty's Passport Office, as is the case with HM Armed Forces and HM Prison Service.

THE MILITARY

Medals featuring Queen Elizabeth II's image will need to be altered to depict that of King Charles III. Military uniforms bearing the Queen's cypher – the monogram impressed on royal and state documents – are likely to be updated over time with the new King's cypher.

POSTBOXES

More than 60 per cent of the UK's 115,000 postboxes carry the ER cypher (for 'Elizabeth Regina', the Latin for Queen). In Scotland, they feature the Scottish crown. And there are still plenty that feature GR ('George Rex' for her father,

ROYAL MALE: New postboxes will bear Charles's cypher, joining those that remain of Queen Victoria, George VI and Elizabeth II

King George VI). The number of new postboxes installed is quite low, but any new ones will feature the new King's cypher CR.

THE POLICE

Similarly, the royal cypher in the centre of helmets used by police forces in England and Wales will have to be updated to the new King's cypher.

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

After Charles is officially proclaimed King, a public announcement will be made from the balcony at St James's Palace, including the call: "God Save the King." The national anthem will then be played with those words sung for the first time since 1952.

The invocation that follows will now be sung as: "Send him victorious, happy and glorious." It may take a while for the change to feel natural.

ROYAL WARRANTS

Businesses with a history of supplying the royal household – from Burberry and Bentley to Gordon's gin and Jordans cereals – enjoy the use of the Queen's coat of arms on their marketing materials, but upon her death these become void. Each company has two years to stop using them.

Warrants Charles issued as Prince of Wales will continue now he is King. It is expected he will now grant Prince William the ability to issue his own warrants.

THE LAW

Senior barristers appointed by the monarch will see their title shift from Queen's Counsel (QC) to King's Counsel (KC). In criminal court cases, the R to denote the Crown will now stand for Rex (the Latin for King) not Regina. At the Old Bailey yesterday, the first case was called on in the name of the King. The court usher said: "Silence be upstanding in court. All persons who have anything to do before My Lords and Ladies, the King's Justices at the Central Criminal Court draw near and give your attendance. God save the King."

THE KING'S SIGNATURE

Until now, Charles has signed his name as 'Charles' – this official

FLAGS

Thousands of flags emblazoned with EIIR (Elizabeth II Regina) will need to be replaced with CIIIR (Charles III Rex) – including those outside police stations and including the Queen's colours, the flags flown by military regiments. Even the royal standard – the quartered flag that flies wherever the monarch is in residence – could be changed.

PRAYERS

The prayers to the Queen in the Book of Common Prayer, dating from 1662, will be amended. As defender of the faith and supreme governor of the Church of England, one prayer asks God to "replenish her with the grace of the Holy Spirit". In the short term, priests are able to amend the prayer for temporary use. The "collect" in services of holy communion that asks God to "rule the heart of thy chosen servant Elizabeth" can be changed by the General Synod.

PLEDGES OF ALLEGIANCE

MPs must pledge allegiance to the crown, before sitting in the House of Commons. Since 1952, the wording has been: "I (name of Member) swear by almighty God that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, her heirs and successors, according to law. So help me God."

By Ray Connolly

LOOKING back over the decades, we can now see that the Queen's annual broadcasts were like little electronic Christmas cards to each and every one of us. They never told us anything we didn't already know about where she'd been or what she'd done or what had happened during the year.

Instead, and more interestingly, they opened a little private window into how she saw the world and her role in it.

Never in her long reign did she submit herself to an interview, and never did she express publicly her direct thoughts.

But through her broadcasts she gave us clues by which we could divine the woman caught by history at the very centre of its British and Commonwealth net.

There she would sit, usually in a comfortable drawing room at Windsor, Buckingham Palace, Sandringham or Balmoral, and remind us of what private joys or sadnesses she, as a family woman, had endured, and others that she and we had together shared.

In the background, there would be a Christmas tree and a small scattering of family Christmas cards and guilt framed photos, and, although the setting would be grand, the situation would be common to many of us. It might easily have made for dull television. But it never did.

Those moments when the curtain was shifted, and, through the lens of a camera, she looked at us, one to one, were riveting.

Indeed, for decades, Christmas Day was built as much around the Queen's broadcast at three in the afternoon on the BBC as any of the other festive rituals. No one ever wanted to miss it, and if we'd just eaten our turkey, it had to be cleared away by the time the Queen came on.

By simply being her practical and polite self, rarely betraying emotion, always stiff upper lip through bad times when she reminded us "We'll meet again" during the Covid pandemic, and with that little smile for a new royal baby, she was the biggest star on television.

But then she always had been from her Coronation in 1953 when millions of our parents' generation, in the thrill of becoming New Elizabethans, went out and bought television sets on the never-never, then invited family and neighbours in to watch with us.

THE death of her father, King George VI, the previous year had been a shock and sad blow to those who had struggled alongside him throughout the war. I was 11 and remember vividly the day his death was announced, when the headmaster entered our classroom and sent us all home at lunchtime out of respect.

The new Queen was, and would be, different for different times.

She was young and we were young and would go through life together, none of us knowing how our country and the world around us would change during her reign.

The royal Christmas broadcast had been inaugurated in 1932 by King George V, reading from a script written for him by Rudyard Kipling.

While his ultimate successor, George VI, had had the unenviable task of speaking to the nation throughout the darkest days of war and postwar hardship.

The Queen's accession to the throne in 1952 was a new beginning.

Hearing those early Christmas broadcasts again she sounds very young, not much more than a girl, although she was already the totemic head of an Empire.

But, although speaking in the high, upper class accent of her rarified social class in those days, the honest, common sense steel was always there.

Altogether she would make 69 Christmas broadcasts only missing one year when, in 1969, she sent a written message instead.

Earlier that year, there had been a TV documentary, Royal Family, and it was felt an extra broadcast at Christmas was unnecessary. (Charles' investiture as Prince of Wales had also been held on July 1, when he was crowned by his mother in a televised ceremony held at Caernarfon Castle).

By a quirk of inherited fate, Her Majesty had been given a herculean task in life, but sharing it with us, she was going to do it to the very best of her abilities.

The world was changing, and in her quiet steadfast way she was commenting on it, seeing the Commonwealth as "an immense union of nations like a family which can be a great power for good" and "benefit to humanity".

She would see the development of the Commonwealth as the ongoing cathedral of her reign, but she never forgot the feelings of the ordinary man and woman.

In 1956, while her husband Prince Philip was on a world tour, she spoke sympathetically of those kept apart by work or service. Mentioning the plight of refugees who had been driven from their homes by war, she was never political, but her Christian ethics were never far from her thoughts as she alluded to the story of their being "no room at the inn" for the birth of baby Jesus.

Her early Christmas broadcasts were on radio, but from 1957 they were shown on television, too.

In 1960 she talked of the death of protesters in Sharpeville in South Africa, while in 1982 she shared the nation's anxiety over the Falklands War. Between 1986 and 1991, television presenter David Attenborough, someone of her own generation, would produce the broadcasts, one of which would include her response to the dreadful fire at Windsor Castle. Showing the Queen's dis-

For millions of Britons, her televised Christmas Day messages were as integral a part of the festivities as turkey and stuffing. This year, for the first time, it will be King Charles III speaking to the nation, and he knows what a tough act he follows treasury as part of her own home went up in flames, it illustrated the human vulnerability that lay behind the pomp and away from the ceremony.

BUT, of course, as titular head of the armed services, she would, by virtue of that role, come across vulnerability in others.

Time and again she would refer to the sacrifices made by others in periods of conflict, mentioning in 1994, the 50th anniversary of VE Day, "those who had not returned".

As the years went by, the mentions of sadness would inevitably increase. In 1997 she talked about the death of Princess Diana, then in 2001 there were the 9/11 attacks on New York with the deaths of more than 2,000 innocent people. A year later she lost both her sister Princess Margaret and the Queen Mother.

Frequently there would be sad little reflections in her seasonal goodwill messages. In 2014 she talked about it being "a time to remember all that we have to be thankful for", while during the Covid pandemic in 2020 she said: "What many people want for Christmas is a simple hug or a squeeze" because "even in the darkest night, there is new hope."

Then last Christmas came the saddest moment when she talked about the loss of her husband, Prince Philip, during the year. "It can be hard for those who have lost loved ones. This year, especially, I understand why."

She wasn't feeling sorry for herself. She was talking from personal experience about the pain which at some time or another we all share.

Throughout her decades of talking directly to you and me she repeated her simple, honest values of life.

At Christmas in 2016 she said: "On our own, we cannot end wars or wipe out injustice, but the cumulative impact of thousands of small acts of goodness can be bigger than we imagine."

This year King Charles III will make his first Christmas broadcast. It won't be easy for him. Will we warm to him as we did to his mother?

We know so much more about his private life than we ever did about that of the Queen and Prince Philip.

Charles has, in the past, been sometimes outspoken about his interests. Will he still want to do that, I wonder?

We all hope he, too, is a success and that his Christmas Day broadcasts become as eagerly-awaited and enjoyed at home in Britain and across the Commonwealth.

But he will know better than anyone that his late mother will be a hard act to follow.

GOLDEN MOMENT:
The Queen greets Estimate after his Royal Ascot win

THE date: Thursday June 20, 2013. The place: Ascot. Royal Ascot, to be precise. A four-year-old filly called Estimate, ridden by Ryan Moore and trained by Sir Michael Stoute, powers past Colour Vision in the final furlong and holds off the late challenges of Simenon and Top Trip to land the Gold Cup in a pulsating finish.

The cheers of the 62,000 crowd are off the scale and probably could be heard as far away as London. That's because this is no "ordinary" Gold Cup winner.

Estimate is owned by the Queen. The victorious horse is carrying Her Majesty's famous, distinctive racing colours of purple body with gold braid, scarlet sleeves and a black velvet cap with a gold fringe.

It is the first time in the Gold Cup's 207-year-old history that the flagship event of the prestigious five-day-meeting, which begins each day with a horse and open carriage Royal procession, has been won by a reigning monarch.

Estimate's emotional win in the 60th year of her coronation was probably the crowning glory of the Queen's lifelong love affair with the Turf, the success being all the more special in that it came at the racecourse which she owned, and at the only meeting with the Royal prefix.

Elizabeth II was besotted with horses since childhood. As a small girl "Lilibet", as she was known, and her younger sister Margaret loved to ride their 20 wooden rocking horses in the royal nursery.

She listened with rapt attention when her grandfather King George V told her of the exploits of his racehorses.

His father Edward VII had as an owner won the Derby three times – the first reigning monarch to own a winner – and the Grand National once. So you could say the Queen, with her attachment to racing, was following in a long family tradition.

She received her first horse, a Shetland pony called Peggy, as a present from her grandfather for her third birthday and soon became an accomplished rider.

After her first exciting day at the races, at Ascot in May 1945, the then Princess Elizabeth's interest in the sport was enhanced two years later when the Aga Khan presented her with a beautifully-bred filly called Astrakhan as a wedding gift.

In 1949, she celebrated her first winner when the chaser Monaveen, which she co-owned with her mother the then Queen, coasted home at Fontwell Park by 15 lengths.

The Queen's lifelong love affair with the Turf, where her riders enjoyed more than 1,800 victories, was crowned by winning the prestigious Gold Cup at Royal Ascot in 2013

AUTHOR Jim Beavis, in his history of Fontwell, records how afterwards Princess Elizabeth and her mother went to tea with the Duke of Norfolk at nearby Arundel Castle to see Astrakhan, who was lodging there.

The Queen Mother described National Hunt racing as, "one of the real sports that's left to us: a bit of danger and a bit of excitement, and the horses, which are the best thing in the world". Her daughter loved the jumps too with its thrills and spills but her main interest as an owner and breeder came on the Flat.

The closest she came to winning the Derby, the most famous Flat race in the world, came in 1953, the week of her Coronation, when Aureole, who had been bred by her father King

George VI, lined up in the field. A lady-in-waiting said to the Queen on the day before she was to be crowned: "You must be feeling nervous, Ma'am." The Queen, her mind on the Derby, replied: "Of course I am but I really do think Aureole will win."

But Aureole finished second. A year later the Queen's horse Landau headed the field with three furlongs to go but faded in the closing stages.

In 2011, after nearly 60 years of trying to win Epsom's Blue Riband, there were high hopes for her Derby entry Carlton House, who was sent off the warm 5-2 favourite, but the colt lost a shoe and could only finish third.

Although the Queen never won the Derby, in 1992 TV cameras showed her child-like delight when she did win the Royal party's Derby sweepstake, snapping up the grand sum of £16.

She may have been the world's richest woman but winning the sweep clearly meant a lot to her, like millions of others who love a successful flutter on the horses.

The Queen's official position as Head of State meant she had to adopt a serious – and at times rather stern – public persona. But it was when she was enjoying a day at the races that we saw the real Elizabeth Windsor.

HER sheer, unadulterated joy at Estimate's Gold Cup win was there for all to witness.

Her knowledge of the sport was phenomenal. It was said that if she ever swapped her throne for the famous black chair on Mastermind, the Queen's specialist subject would be Flat racing. The jockeys who rode for her testify to her expertise.

Gary Stevens revealed the detailed instructions Her Majesty had given him before he rode her horse Blue Print to victory at Royal Ascot. "It was like a road map," he explained.

When she wasn't fulfilling official duties, the Queen liked nothing better than to unwind by watching the racing on television or reading about the sport in newspapers.

It was said the first pick from the pile of her morning papers for many years was, before its closure in 1998, The Sporting Life.

Her racehorse trainers also speak of her enthusiasm.

"She could have been a trainer," said Ian Balding, who trained for the Queen for 35 years. "She is a natural with horses. If you go round stables with her she wants to look at all the horses, not just her own."

"There are times when I would advise an owner not to stand too near some horses because they could kick. In her case I don't have to say it."

The Queen enjoyed plenty of big race successes, particularly in the first half of her long reign. In 1957, she landed her first Classic when Carrozza won the Oaks.

A year later she won the 2000 Guineas with Pall Mall. Then in 1974 she won the 1000 Guineas with Highclere, who also won the French Oaks. One of the most memorable days was when her filly Dunfermline, ridden by Willie Carson and trained by Major Dick Hern, won the Oaks in the week of her Silver Jubilee in 1977. For good measure, Trooping the Colour ceremony for 18 years. In 1981 there was a dramatic incident as six blank shots were fired at the Queen from the crowd. Burmese was startled but the Queen soon had her horse under control and the pair continued along Horse Guards Parade as if nothing had happened.

THE trusty Royal steed died at the ripe old age of 28 in 1990 and, like other much-loved horses owned by the Queen, was buried in Windsor Home Park.

During the first Coronavirus lockdown of 2020 the Queen, then aged 94, was pictured riding her 14-year-old fell pony Balmoral Fern in the grounds of Windsor Castle.

That year she missed attending Royal Ascot for the first time as ruling monarch due to it being held behind closed doors, but she did return for the Saturday of the reduced-crowd 2021 event.

She also attended a full-house Champions Day in October 2021 to be inducted into the British Champions Series Hall of Fame. It was a popular choice.

After Estimate's Gold Cup win eight years earlier, there were spontaneous cries of "Hats off for Her Majesty!" from the jubilant crowd. Though among a total of more than 1,800 victories in her jockey's racing colours of purple, gold and scarlet, it was a magic moment.

The Queen's big smile in the Royal Box told us she right where she belonged and where she was most happy.

Dunfermline also won the St Leger, adding to Her Majesty's Classic collection. The Queen was once quoted as saying: "If it were not for my Archbishop of Canterbury I should be off on my plane to Longchamp [Racecourse, in Paris] every Sunday."

It's fair to say her passion for racing did bring criticism from certain highbrows types who felt the ruling monarch should have patronised "artier" pursuits.

But as one newspaper leader put it in 1977: "If the Queen would rather go to Ascot than peer at a lot of dirty nappies in the Institute of Contemporary Arts, what is wrong with that?"

Racing certainly benefited greatly from the Queen's interest, as an owner and breeder.

"If the Queen loves racing then the sport can't be as bad or peripheral as some allegedly clever people think it is. By God, she is good for us," opined racing columnist Alastair Down.

Captain Sir Rupert Mackeson, a former amateur rider and officer in the Royal Horse Guards in the 1960s, says: "The impact of the Queen's patronage of the sport cannot be underestimated.

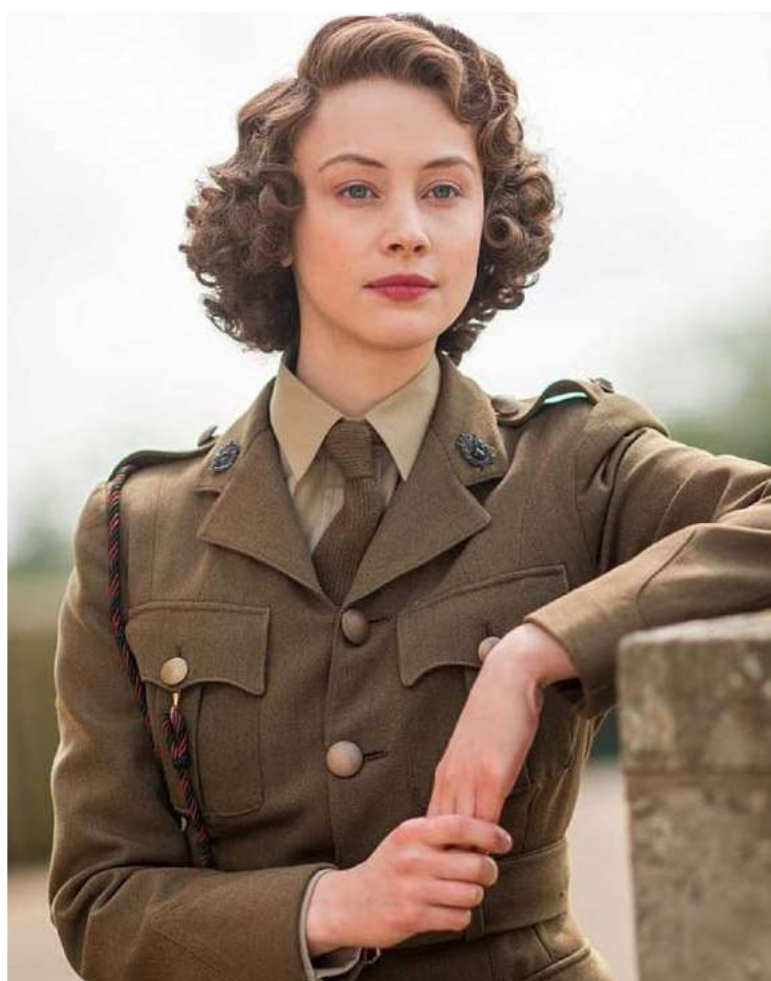

"Not only was she a leading figure in international horse-racing but deep into her 90s she still loved riding and she instilled her love of horses into her children and grandchildren."

Both Princess Anne and Prince Charles rode competitively and their mother took a keen interest in their equestrianism. In 1987 journalist Tony Stafford reported: "Among the massive crowds for Diamond Day at Ascot on Saturday, one urgent voice from the stands exhorted, 'Don't be so cool, do something!' This self-confessed plea came not from an ordinary punter, but from the Queen as she shouted home the Princess Royal in the Dresden Diamond Stakes."

Perhaps the Queen would have been a successful lady jockey had she not been the heir to the throne. But she did take the opportunity to ride her own horses whenever she could. One of her all-time favourites was Burmese, a 1969 gift from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Queen rode the jet black mare side-saddle in the annual

OUR QUEEN...ON

From Helen Mirren to Claire Foy, some of our biggest stars have played the Monarch. But no one ever entirely captured her essence COULD there be a greater or more daunting role for an actor than playing Queen Elizabeth II? The longest-serving monarch in history was a devoted public servant and dedicated family woman, the most famous woman in the world, but in many ways she remained an enigma, her innermost thoughts never revealed.

This paradox perhaps explains why we have embraced many screen adaptations over time offering us insight into her life and character. And the task of portraying her has fallen to a succession of stars over decades, some more successfully than others.

Queen of the on-screen queens, as it were, must surely be Helen Mirren who won an Oscar, BAFTA and Golden Globe award for her sympathetic and introspective portrayal in Stephen Frears' 2006 film, The Queen.

The film follows the days after the death of Princess Diana in 1997.

Mirren later described the experience as "nerve-wracking", even comparing it to "stepping into the hornet's nest" because of the esteem in which the Monarch was held and the potential pitfalls in playing her.

The Queen herself is believed to have approved, for she invited Mirren to dinner at Buckingham Palace. She was made a Dame in the 2003 Birthday Honours List. The actress won further accolades reprising her role as the monarch in Peter Morgan's 2013 West End play The Audience, which explored the Queen's weekly audiences with her prime ministers.

Before winning the role of playing a young Queen in the sumptuous Netflix series The Crown, Claire Foy was a relatively unknown actress but her performance helped make it one of the network's first globally successful streaming successes and built Netflix a loyal following.

Foy effortlessly captured the monarch's cut-glass accent and mannerisms while imbuing her Elizabeth with strength and vulnerability as she adjusted to a new life and responsibility following her father's untimely death.

Olivia Coleman succeeded Foy in seasons three and four as the monarch in middle age, spanning the death of Winston Churchill in 1965 to Margaret Thatcher's 1990 resignation as prime minister and the breakdown of Prince Charles's marriage.

Coleman occasionally struggled with the vowel enunciation and seemed unduly stiff in the first series as she tried to shake the comedic, smiley characters with which she had previously been associated. Although she grew into the role and, like Foy, won a Golden Globe for it, she admitted to being "quite happy" to pass on the mantle to Imelda Staunton for series five.

In an interview, she confided: "Behind closed doors, we don't know what she's like. I had a little bit of play with that. But definitely... the hardest part I've done is someone who's real. I'm not ashamed to say that I'm quite pleased now to be able to move on to something else."

While we have yet to see the newest series of The Crown – whose premiere may be delayed following the Queen's death, creator Peter Morgan has indicated – we have been fortunate enough to see early images of Staunton as the monarch moving into older age.

A four-time Laurence Olivier Award actress, of Vera Drake and Harry Potter fame, she looks the epitome of the ageing monarch in a green bow-tied shirt, donning grey coiffed curls and a pearl necklace.

But it's not always been Britons who have played the Queen.

Canadian actress Sarah Gadon chronicled the events of VE Day in A Royal Night Out, a fictionalised account of the teenage Princess Elizabeth and her sister, Princess Margaret, slipping out of Buckingham Palace to join the celebrations at the end of the Second World War among ecstatic crowds in London.

Gadon charmed audiences with a delightful performance and her accent was so spot on that many people believed she was British.

Perhaps the most care-free performance of Queen Elizabeth came from an even younger actress, Freya Wilson.

Then aged ten, she played Elizabeth as a young girl in the 2010 period drama The King's Speech, also starring Colin Firth as King George VI and Helena Bonham Carter as the Queen Mother. The Queen was said to have approved the Oscar-nominated film after receiving a private screening.

SEVERAL years before the arrival of The Crown, actresses Emilia Fox and Barbara Flynn captured the Monarch in "pivotal years" during her life in the Channel Four docudrama The Queen.

Veering at times into soap territory, the episodes nonetheless provided another snapshot of the defining crises faced by the Queen during her life. Fox added gravitas as the Queen in "Sisters", which portrayed her at times challenging relationship with Princess Margaret.

And in The Queen And I, a light-hearted adaptation of Sue Townsend's satirical novel, Samantha Bond donned a turquoise hat and coat while imagining what would happen to the Queen if the Royal Family lost their regal status and she had to live on a council estate.

One can only imagine that the good-humoured Monarch, should she have seen it, would have watched that depiction with a wry smile.

Of course, no one played the Queen better than the Monarch herself, first in the James Bond sketch opposite Daniel Craig for the 2012 London Olympics opening ceremony.

Most recently, an adorable skit with Paddington Bear at Buckingham Palace to mark her Platinum Jubilee Celebrations demonstrated her sense of humour and won new legions of young fans.

As Paddington said: "Thank you Ma'am, for everything."

Crisis talks on whether Strictly will be delayed

By Nicola Methven

STRICTLY Come Dancing's launch and the first episode of Sir David Attenborough's new Frozen Planet series may be postponed in the wake of the Queen's death.

The BBC ballroom show's pre-recorded first episode is scheduled for next Saturday, which falls within the 10-day period of official mourning – and two days before the monarch's funeral.

The weekly live shows are due to follow from Saturday September 24.

Yesterday BBC bosses were holding crisis meetings on whether Strictly should be pushed back – while insiders said it was “unlikely” to be moved to BBC Two.

Last night, no decision had been taken but all publicity interviews with the 15 contestants were postponed.

Clash

Elsewhere, the BBC's new nature series Frozen Planet II, voiced by Sir David, could be put on hold. Its scheduled launch will clash with televised church services for the Queen tomorrow.

Meanwhile, ITV's National Television Awards, due to be shown live on Thursday, have been shifted to Thursday, October 13.

On Thursday, 16 million people tuned into coverage of Her Majesty's death, with most selecting the BBC.

In the 30 minutes after her death was announced, 9.7 million watched BBC One, with 900,000 choosing BBC News and 800,000 watching BBC Two. ITV drew three million, followed by Sky News (700,000), Channel 4 (500,000) and Channel 5 (200,000). Channel 4 resumed normal programming yesterday, saying it would bring a “valuable sense of continuity” for viewers.

TV schedules are being revised daily and there is no information yet on when normal programming on other channels may resume.

SIR David Attenborough yesterday joined celebrities in paying tribute to the Queen and praised her for dedicating her life to serve the country.

The environmentalist and broadcaster, first knighted by the Queen in 1985, said he would remember Her Majesty as someone who had an “extraordinary ability to put you at your ease”.

Adored

Sir David, 96, said: “If there was a technical hitch she wanted to know what it was, and if it had a funny side, she was quick to see the joke. Yet not for one second could you forget that you were in the presence of someone who had willingly accepted enormous responsibility and dedicated her life to serving the nation – that you were, in short, in the presence of royalty. “The whole nation is bereaved.”

years. He produced her televised Christmas Day address in the 1980s and 1990s and featured in the BBC's Platinum Party at the Palace earlier this year to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee.

In 2020, Sir David was appointed a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St Michael And St George for services to television broadcasting and to conservation in the Queen's Birthday Honours list.

Dame Joanna Lumley, 76, joined in the tributes and said the Queen represented “all that was kind and fair, brave and good-hearted, noble and entirely admirable”.

She added: “We shall miss her with all our hearts and wish her safe travelling on her final great journey. She was adored and respected and as we send our loving sympathies to all the members of the Royal Family, we count ourselves lucky to have lived during her long and fabulous reign. God bless her – and long live our great new King.”

Sir Rod Stewart and Dame Joan Collins, 89, also reflected on their meetings with the Queen.

Sir Rod, 77, paid tribute in an Instagram post, saying: “The Queen has been an unwavering presence throughout my life and a great unifier. A shining star that will never fade in our hearts and souls.” The singer, who performed at the Queen's Platinum Jubilee concert in June, added: “What a privilege it was to perform for her. My deepest sympathies to the Royal Family. God save the King.”

Dame Joan revealed she "fell under the spell" of the Queen the first of the many times she met her.

The Hollywood star, who was made a Dame in 2015, added: "My admiration has remained undimmed throughout the years", as she shared a photo of her alongside Her Majesty during their younger years.

Ed Sheeran, 31, who performed an emotional rendition of his hit song Perfect to close the Platinum Jubilee Pageant, also honoured the monarch by posting a black and white photo of the Queen with: "Thank you ma'am x."

In a short tribute on Twitter, ex-Police singer Sting, 70, made a CBE in 2003, wrote: "I had a quiet weep for the Queen. I am sad for my country and what it has lost."

Music mogul Simon Cowell, 62, said on Instagram: "I'm incredibly sad to hear of the passing of the Queen. With incredible strength she was someone who loved her country and was able to lead with so much love. I feel very lucky that in my lifetime we have had a monarch who managed to balance great leadership, tradition and progression. I would like to send my respects to her family during this time."

Sir Mick Jagger, 79, reflected on how the Queen had "always been there" throughout his life, adding: "I remember her as a beautiful young lady, to the much-beloved grandmother of the nation. My deepest sympathies are with the Royal Family."

Sir Paul McCartney, 80, shared an image of the Queen in her youth signed by himself, and captioned it simply: "God bless Queen Elizabeth II. May she rest in peace. Long live The King."

James Bond star Daniel Craig, 54, said she leaves "an incomparable legacy and will be profoundly missed", adding: "I, like so many, was deeply saddened by the news and my thoughts are with the Royal Family, those she loved and all those who loved her." Bond producers Barbara Broccoli and Other celebrities paying their respects included Ant and Dec, Stephen Fry, Ozzy Osbourne, Sue Perkins, Sir Philip Pullman, and Victoria and David Beckham.

Institutions including Bafta, The National Gallery, The National Theatre and the BBC add their sorrow. BBC director-general Tim Davie said: "Her Majesty was the absolute embodiment of public service. Knifeman admits killing family

Hiding...Jacques denies murders

A MAN has admitted stabbing four members of the same family to death but denies it was murder. Joshua Jacques pleaded guilty to the manslaughter of Dolet Hill, 64, her partner Denton Burke, 58, their daughter Tanysha Ofori-Akuffo, 45, and granddaughter Samantha Drummonds, 27. The Old Bailey heard that the 28-year-old attacked the three generations at Ms Hill's terraced home in Bermondsey, south London, on April 25. Police were called to a disturbance at the

By Emily Pennick property in the early hours. They found Mr Burke's body at the foot of the stairs and those of the three women lying in the kitchen. They had all suffered numerous wounds with one or more knives. Jacques was then discovered hiding naked in the upstairs bathroom. He was Tasered during his arrest. Appearing via video-link from HMP Belmarsh prison, he denied murder but admitted manslaughter by reason of diminished responsibility. The prosecution indicated the pleas to the lesser offence would not be accepted and Jacques, from Lewisham in south-east London, would face trial. Ms Hill had been with council worker Mr Burke for 15 years and she had worked in the NHS for more than 20 years, while Ms Ofori-Akuffo was a nurse. Judge Richard Marks KC remanded Jacques in custody. A further hearing will be held on December 19 when a trial date is likely to be set.

Number of hip fractures 'will double in 30 years'

By Stephen Beech

THE number of people suffering hip fractures will nearly double worldwide within 30 years, a study claims. It is already a dangerous and debilitating problem for older people but doctors warned it could become a "far more severe" public health issue as the world's population ages and becomes increasingly frail. Researchers say the risk is more severe among men and those over 85. The team from the University of Hong Kong analysed data from 19 countries for patients 50 and older who had fractured their hips between 2005 and 2018. They found numbers were expected to increase in 18 of those nations.

Magnitude

Fractures are estimated to be 180 per 100,000 people. But looking at gender only, the figures are 236 among 100,000 women and 118 in the same number of men. Using predicted population size provided by the World Bank, by 2050 the worldwide hip fracture counts will have likely doubled compared with 2018 - with a larger proportional increase in men than women. Researchers said one of the reasons may be that, although the incidence of hip fractures declined in most countries during the study, the magnitude of decline was smaller for men. Meanwhile, men's life expectancy is likely to hit 75 by 2050, the age after which the study showed a high risk of hip fracture. Osteoporosis has been MAKING breakfast the biggest meal of the day is unlikely to help slimmers lose weight after all. It was believed a big brekkie was better for the metabolism - "breakfast like a king, lunch like a prince, and dine like a pauper" - but findings throw this into doubt. An Aberdeen University team found it does not matter which meal is the biggest because our bodies treat all calories the same. The study found 30 dieters - 16 men and 14 women - who either had an early feast or an evening blow-out lost just over seven pounds a month. But a big meal first DID mean they stayed full longer. In journal Cell Metabolism, Professor Alexandra Johnstone said: "There is not likely to be one diet that fits all."

underdiagnosed in males for many years, researchers said. Study leader Dr Ching-lung Cheung said: "The use of anti-osteoporosis medications following a fracture is lower in men than in women by 30 per cent to 67 per cent." Speaking at the American Society of Bone and Mineral Research in Austin, Texas, he added. "More attention should be paid to preventing and treating hip fractures in men."

A life dedicated to the British people

IT WAS impossible and inevitable at the same time, and now it has happened.

The woman whose reign surpassed most of her subjects' lifespans has died, on a dreich Thursday afternoon in Scotland.

As we enter the period of mourning all I can think of, like that rainbow piercing the clouds and arcing over Windsor Castle, is how lucky she was, and how lucky we were to have had her for so long.

I was lucky, personally, to have met her twice. I remember worrying about what I was going to say to her, and in the end I bobbled and babbled: "I think you know my husband's father as he worked for your mother!"

I remember thinking she was probably the cleverest person I had ever met. The second time I was too crushed by the first time to say anything.

And she was lucky in so many ways. She was universally revered and loved until the end, but also because from the tender and unformed age of 25, on the death of her father George VI, she knew exactly who she was and what she was for, and therefore utterly untroubled by the existential angst that afflicts the rest of us mortals.

She was The Queen, and she was for us, and that was her destiny for the whole of her life, which happily turned out to be long. She continued to be our servant without pause and without obvious fatigue or impatience for the next 70 years.

She managed that extraordinary feat while serving in uniform in the war, marrying the man she adored till the end, producing four adored children – there were many more grandchildren and great grandchildren – while always putting her duty to us, her subjects, across this nation, the realms and the Commonwealth, first.

She combined being immortal and invisible and godly with being the nation's matriarch, or as someone sobbed at the gates of Buckingham Palace: "She was everyone's Nan".

She wrote a letter this year to mark her Platinum Jubilee. It proved how lucky she felt she was. She made sure that Charles's wife Camilla would be known as Queen Consort, but the letter is also rich with happy words like grateful, fortunate, blessed, humbled.

The final paragraph started, "I look forward to serving you with all my heart," and she signed off, "Your Servant, Elizabeth."

As Paddington tweeted: Thank you, Ma'am. For everything. And long live the King.

Brutal attacks have no place in politics

ON "NEW Prime Minister Day" on Tuesday (so commercialised, it comes round earlier every year!) I was making my way back home from Westminster. Earlier that morning, I'd been at No. 10 as my brother Boris said his goodbyes, posed for photographs, then made his final speech before MPs, teary staff, and the rest cheered him and Carrie out of the Downing Street gates in a cortege of Range Rovers, God-speeding them to RAF Northolt and Balmoral.

I was listening to the radio through my airpods, feeling pensive as you might expect. Nobody knew then that the ceremonies of this day – sending out the old with wise words of warm advice, welcoming in the new – would be Her Majesty's final public acts after 70 unblemished years of unmatched service. Everyone I had just seen inside No. 10 – apart from, I think, photographer Andrew "Parsnips" Parsons, and Jacob Rees-Mogg – were going to lose their jobs. Yet inside the bunker, it was a proper wartime medley: stiff upper lip, Blitz spirit, smiles, humour, hugs, and a not-so-great British breakfast of lukewarm grey tea and congealing bacon baps. The news told me, as I trudged home, that Liz Truss was circling in her jet in a squall somewhere over Aberdeen. And I was thinking about her failure to shake Rishi Sunak's hand after she was declared the winner of the Conservative leadership contest.

But as I marched across Hyde Park I heard my brother – only minutes away from resigning from "the best job in the world" to the Boss in Balmoral, having been brutally sacked by his own side – described by a presenter on LBC, the station I work for, as a "monstrous, pathetic, corrupt, bullying, coward".

Despite facing one of the most difficult and hardest moments of his life, he was an "abject disgrace". He was a "proven liar who presided over bloodshed on an unprecedented scale".

Reader, I stopped listening. I have nothing but admiration for the demonic brilliance of my colleague who warmed to this theme for three hours that day as he has done for days, weeks and years. He has always been pleasant to me in person. But I do wonder sometimes, and this was one of those occasions, whether he, and others of his ilk, have any idea their stirring words – chosen for maximum éclat on morning Twitter – are taken both literally and seriously by a scary number of people.

They are assumed to be true, even though every assertion made – from mass murderer to clown – and every prejudice aired is subjective, as is the nature of the beast on opinion-led talk radio. They are repeated so often they are believed. Then even lisped as gospel by little children at school.

I confess, I sometimes wonder if this is why I get shouted at or shoved sometimes in the street – apart from being very annoying in my own right, of course. I am a proxy for the mythical beast conjured up by these words. The reason I raise this now is because a new PM, and a woman, takes office the same week as a new King begins his reign.

Fresh meat walks into the public arena, stained with the blood of all the politicians who have been slain before her. It's not too late in her premiership, then, to remind everyone that people enter politics because they want to help run the country and make things work.

And these people have families. They have problems and stuff like everyone else. And they have parents and children and siblings who feel helplessly hurt as the horrible hailstorm of hate rains down on the person in public life they love. As the Queen dies, King Charles ascends the throne, my brother leaves and Liz Truss enters the highest office in the land, it's time to remember that a politician is flesh and blood.

It's too late for my brother, but we must remember Liz Truss is a human being, too. If we don't want to have a New Prime Minister Day every other year or so, for goodness' sake let's all try to treat her like one.

I BUMPED into Dame Kate Bingham – one of our Vaccine Queens – at the FT's summer party this week. "Are you busy?" I asked. She was. She's always had a day job in bio-sciences.

"Well, couldn't you sort out the energy crisis and the climate change emergency as a sort of side hustle?" I asked, not even as a joke.

After all, on April 3, 2020, Kate was told that the likelihood of any Covid-19 vaccine working was 15 per cent, tops. But on December 8, 2020, the first NHS patient received a vaccine.

I bet if she put her mind to it she could help us weather the latest crisis. She's even got a book out next month – The Long Shot – about the inside race to vaccinate Britain.

Ask a busy woman, eh!

BIG SCREEN MOVIE NIGHT ON A SMALLER SCALE IS JUST THE TICKET

I WENT to the flicks on a wet Wednesday evening. The Gate cinema in Notting Hill, west London, was welcoming, small and cosy.

There was a generous selection of drinks and fattening snacks for sale, but not in industrial sizes. Tickets were £14, which I don't think is extortionate as I watched Baz Luhrmann's Elvis movie online for £15 and fell asleep halfway through. The film – The Forgiven – was insanely entertaining. There were – at a guess – half a dozen of us there. If we don't use it, we'll lose it! It really will be "That's All, Folks" forever. So support your local cinema, please.

FREEDOM FOR UKRAINE

US sends £2.3bn more for Ukraine and neighbours to fight off Putin

By Robert Kellaway

US DEFENCE Secretary Lloyd Austin has approved £2.3billion more in aid for Ukraine and neighbouring countries threatened by Russian aggression.

It is on top of £11billion of military support already pledged to Kyiv and includes £575million in arms and equipment to help the country fight for its survival. Austin detailed the assistance as he met dozens of fellow ministers at a US air base in Ramstein, Germany.

The package includes howitzers, ammunition, Humvee vehicles, armoured ambulances and anti-tank systems. The Biden administration said it had set aside £1.7billion in long-term assistance for Ukraine and 18 nearby nations including non-members of Nato “most potentially at risk from future Russian aggression”.

The US State Department said about £850million of aid would go to Ukraine with the rest to be divided among Albania, Bosnia, Bulgaria, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Georgia, Greece, Kosovo, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, Montenegro, North Macedonia, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia.

The support aims to help them “deter and defend against emergent threats to their sovereignty and territorial integrity” by enhancing military integration with Nato and countering “Russian influence and aggression”. The department added: “This assistance demonstrates yet again our unwavering commitment to Ukraine’s future as a democratic, sovereign and independent state, as well as the security of allies and partners across the region.”

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said on a visit to the Ukrainian capital the aid would be delivered at a “pivotal” moment in Ukraine’s defence against Russian invaders with its operations “proving effective”. He vowed that the US and its allies would “continue to exert that pressure until the aggression ceases and Ukraine is fully sovereign and independent”.

In Washington, US President Joe Biden held a joint video call with allies including Prime Minister Liz Truss and German Chancellor Olaf Scholz in which they reiterated their collective support for Ukraine.

Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky said his troops had successfully attacked Russian forces in the south and east of the country, as well as retaking settlements near Kharkiv. Both Ukrainian and pro-Russian officials reported fighting around Balakliia, 38 miles south-east of the north-eastern city.

UK Defence Secretary Ben Wallace says there are signs Ukraine is making real military progress as West-supplied long-range artillery and rockets target Russian supply lines and command centres.

President Vladimir Putin denied Russia has suffered setbacks, saying: “We have not lost anything and will not lose anything.” He claims to be fighting neo-Nazis but that is derided by Western powers.

Women weep for joy as liberators kick out Russians

By Will Stewart

IN a moment of victory, Ukrainian troops stand on a lowered Russian flag after liberating the city of Balakliia.

And in front of the flag of Ukraine, they proudly show the world their success against Putin’s invaders.

In videos and photos, weeping women – speaking Russian – are seen running to hug several soldiers.

“How much we waited for you,” said one.

A soldier answers back: “It’s all right.”

And another woman says to the Ukrainian liberator: “We’ve been so much praying for your return.”

“Thank you for coming back.”

Volodymyr Zelensky said his forces have captured “dozens of settlements” across the Kharkiv region, something Moscow disputes, claiming Kyiv has invented phantom successes to boast to Nato leaders.

Vasily Nebenzya, Putin’s permanent representative to the UN, said only “several peripheral villages” had been taken. “Even the top brass of the Ukrainian armed forces opposed this madness,” he said.

“But the leader of Ukraine was obstinate following his conversation with his US and UK colleagues.”

Horror...police at scene

2 women stabbed to death in village

By Matthew George

POLICE have launched a double murder inquiry in a village after two women were found dead with stab wounds.

Officers were called to a house in Great Waldingfield, near Sudbury, Suffolk, on Thursday morning.

A police spokeswoman said: "A seriously injured man was also located inside the property and was detained."

"He was taken to hospital by air ambulance where he is in a serious condition."

"Police believe that this is a contained incident and there is no wider threat to the community."

It is understood that the three people at the house knew each other.

Police said a reported gas leak at the house had been made safe and evacuated neighbours could return home.

Daltrey: My generation set to quit

By Mark Jefferies

THE Who's lead singer Roger Daltrey has admitted the rock pioneers are coming to the end of the road.

Roger, 78, said the requirements of singing legendary songs such as My Generation meant he would soon have no choice but to retire.

The star – about to hit the US with the band – said: "The Who is getting near retirement age. I'd like to stop while we're still doing it well."

"When I can't sing the notes anymore, sing to where it touches the audience, then it's time."

"The Who's music is very different from most rock. You're dealing with words from a deep inner space within us all. They have to connect the singer to the audience."

"If I lose the power to do that, I will stop, even if it's after this tour."

Devastation...grim aftermath of the IRA Manchester bombing on June 15, 1996

Man arrested over 1996 Manchester IRA bombing

By Eleanor Barlow

A MAN has been held in connection with IRA bombing in Manchester city centre 26 years ago.

Police said he was detained at Birmingham airport on Thursday on suspicion of terrorism offences.

The man will be interviewed by officers from Counter Terrorism Policing North West investigating the IRA bomb blast in Manchester on June 15, 1996.

Head of investigations Detective Superintendent Andrew Meeks said: "Although thankfully no one was killed during the bombing, hundreds of people were left with injuries – many of which were life changing – and more across Greater Manchester and the North-west were affected by what happened on that day."

Horrific

"We have always been committed to holding those responsible for the attack to account and bringing them to justice and have been re-investigating for several years, with a team of dedicated detectives re-examining the original case files and pursuing new lines of inquiry."

"Following the arrest, we have contacted individuals who were victims of this horrific attack to ensure that they're updated, as we know for many people this will bring back memories of that terrible day."

"We are doing all we can to support our communities and those who were affected. We remain determined to hold those responsible to account regardless of the time passed and would still encourage anyone who has any information to get in touch."

The 3,300lb bomb caused massive damage and more than 200 people suffered injuries.

The city's Arndale Centre shopping area suffered extensive damage, with entire buildings destroyed.

Footage from a security video later showed a large van that was suspected of containing the bomb as it moved through Manchester city centre.

The bombing was the subject of 2014 TV series From There To Here, starring Philip Glenister and Liz White as survivors of the blast.

EXCLUSIVEBy Rob Crossan

WHEN Clive Myrie began presenting Mastermind, he rather fancied that, were he a contestant sitting nervously in the fabled black chair on the iconic half-century old quiz show, his specialist subject would be jazz or the American Presidency.

Twelve months on, the veteran BBC news-reader and world affairs correspondent is in absolutely no doubt as to how he would fare were he to step out across the darkened studio to the sound of the aptly-named theme, Approaching Menace.

"I've never really believed I could function as a contestant on Mastermind," Myrie admits with a laugh. "I've seen the pressure they've faced over the last year as I've been presenting the show."

"It's Britain's toughest quiz. There's no conferring, there's no one you can lean on, it's just you and your brain and me, the interrogator. I would never, ever claim that I seriously could sit in that black chair."

It was on September 11, 1972 – 50 years ago tomorrow – that the BBC screened the first episode of what is now one of the longest running programmes on British television.

The format has barely changed since the late Magnus Magnusson hosted the initial series, which was followed by a radio version with Peter Snow, then a short-lived run on the Discovery Channel chaired by Clive Anderson before a triumphant return to BBC Two in 2003 where Today's fearsome interrogator John Humphrys anchored the programme for 18 years before finally handing over to Bolton-born Myrie.

The specialist subject areas chosen by the contestants remain as varied and as wilfully random as ever, but Myrie is quick to banish any arguments topics might sometimes be overly obscure.

"Arcane is in the eye of the beholder," he insists. "For the contender, it's something they love and have been passionate about for years and years. I love that you're getting a bit of a window into the minds of the British public, what they know and what they're thinking about and focusing on."

But Myrie, more used to anchoring the primetime BBC news or reporting, memorably, from the war in Ukraine earlier this year, does admit that sometimes Mastermind can prove a challenge even to its host.

"The toughest rounds for me are ones where I have to get pronunciations of place names correct," he confesses.

"In the last series I had to make sure I got the phrasing right for the Welsh towns that were involved in the Rebecca Riots which was a social uprising by farmers in the early 1840s. Then there were cycling routes and destinations in France for one specialist subject and the geography of Switzerland. These can be tricky but I'm always game for it."

When the show's creator Bill Wright wrestled with the style and tone of the quiz, he looked back to the three grueling years he spent as a war prisoner of the Gestapo.

HIS NAZI captors' demands for name, rank and serial number morphed into the curt instructions for contestants to supply name, occupation and specialist subject with Magnusson and his successors billed as the "Interrogator".

Dealing with pressured environments is something Myrie has more experience of than most.

IT STARTED 50 YEARS AGO... AND IT STILL HASN'T FINISHED

From his beginnings in radio and television news covering conflicts in Belfast and Algeria in the early 1990s, he has gone on to be the BBC's man in the front line of wars in far flung places, ranging from Liberia to East Timor to, most recently, Ukraine.

With more than a quarter of a century's experience of reporting in dangerous places, he believes that the nature of war has noticeably changed during his career.

"Several of my colleagues have died in Ukraine by simply trying to tell the story of a war and inform people of what is going on in their world," he says.

"One of the main things that has changed is how different sides at war have developed from issuing propaganda to what I would now call issuing outright lies, literally saying that black is white. Seeing that has made me even more stubborn in my quest to get to the truth."

Some of the memories of the past six months of brutal warfare have left an indelible print on Myrie's mind, as he recounts with no small degree of emotion.

"The column of burnt out Russian military vehicles in Bucha really stuck with me. There were bodies of charred Russian soldiers still inside the tanks. But it's always the attacks on the defenceless that stick with me the most."

"It's the attacks on residential areas where there are no soldiers, no military installations at all. These are areas that are simply attacked to sow panic and fear and put pressure on the authorities to change their war posture."

"It made me want to stay in Ukraine after Russian troops invaded. Propaganda was establishment as well. We need far more diversity in terms of producers and directors. There's work to be done. We're funded by the levy, the licence fee. And if we're not representing as much of a cross section of the public as possible then we're not justifying our existence."

It's a surprisingly bold statement for the BBC employee, who has no plans to follow his former colleague Andrew Marr – who claimed he felt "frustrated" about having to "self-censor" his opinions – into private sector broadcasting.

"I rant about a whole host of things, I can assure you," Myrie smiles.

"But I don't let my views be known by all and sundry on social media because that's not the point of me on this earth, I don't think. The point of me is to report as factually and truthfully as possible and to have a more informed citizenry who can then make their own decisions about their lives."

coming from both sides and the public has a right to get a fair and balanced idea of what's going on. The danger is that propaganda from both sides can end up drowning out anyone trying to get to the actual truth.

"If people like me aren't there trying to do that, what is the point of the BBC? There is no point to the BBC."

Currently living in London with his wife Catherine, a furniture restorer and upholsterer, Myrie's lifestyle is several universes removed from his father who, back in Bolton, worked for British Leyland making car batteries after emigrating to Britain from Jamaica. But despite his enormous success, his position as one of the BBC's most respected newsreaders, correspondents and now quizmasters, and one of Britain's most famous black faces, it is far from a case of "job done".

Citing Sir Trevor McDonald as his earliest influence – "He was the only person I saw on telly who looked like me" – Myrie is adamant the UK's broadcast media needs to go much further diversity-wise, and not just in terms of front-of-camera faces.

"It's not just about the colour of your skin," he says.

"You've got to have social mobility in terms of social class too. I think where much more effort is needed in broadcasting is behind the scenes. I'm talking about the positions of higher executives and the people who make the decisions.

"There needs to be change in the technical

'If people like me aren't trying to tell the truth about events like Ukraine, what is the point of the BBC?'

BUT WHICHEVER dangerous part of the world he reports from next ("I'm particularly interested in the civil conflict in Ethiopia at the moment which has mostly gone under the radar," he tells me), it is clear Myrie will mostly be keeping his personal views about politics to himself.

Yet for a man who has spent his entire career focusing on just the facts, when it comes to his, and other journalists, role in public life, he can be noticeably vociferous.

"Nobody cares about my opinions!" he concludes.

"I'm just a bloke. Why should a housewife in Pinner want to know my opinions about anything? Some journalists do want to get their point of view out there but that's not what I'm about. I don't see the BBC ever allowing me to have my own newspaper column or anything like that. And honestly, I don't think I'd want them to let me have such a thing happen. It's just not part of my make-up to just bang on about what I think about something."

GENIUS WHO FOUGHT HIS DRUG DEMONS ...AND BEAT THEM

EXCLUSIVE

By Rob Crossan

FOR the world's most low-key rock'n'roller, it made perfect sense. Charlie Watts was once described as someone who "would have made the world's worst junkie". Yet, when Keith Richards made this remark about his late Rolling Stones bandmate, it was based on a humbling and almost devastating experience.

"I took heroin and I drank a lot and it all goes together," the drummer, who died in August last year aged 80, once admitted.

"With all those things you think you can handle them. Then you realise you can't stop. I got to a point where I realised I was going to lose everything. Keith found me on the floor once and said, 'You should wait 'till you're 60 before you start doing that stuff – then you can do it slowly'."

Famously faithful to his wife Shirley, and eschewing band groupies, the dapper and immaculately attired Watts (he even took his own tea set on tour when the Stones hit the road) always looked the least likely to dabble with narcotics.

Yet, during the first half of the 1980s, when he was already in his 40s, something changed – a period he later described with memorable understatement as a "mid-life crisis" – that could in part be traced back to his lifetime love of jazz.

His subsequent journey to the dark side is one of many stories revealed by veteran rock critic Paul Sexton in the first authorised biography of Watts, Charlie's Good Tonight, which is published next week. The book tells of the star's humble origins in north London, from where he grew to become the loose, rock-steady metronome for The Rolling Stones, joining in 1962 and remaining behind his kit for the next six decades.

"Jazz was a real double-edged sword to Charlie," says Sexton. "He wanted to dress exactly like his jazz heroes and that music profoundly affected him from an early age. It seemed following the drug habits of his heroes wasn't a path Charlie would ever go down."

"That changed, but not until he was in his 40s."

IN MANY ways, the early to mid 1980s were the nadir of the Stones' career. With Mick and Keith barely on speaking terms, the former having signed a solo album deal and expressed his enthusiasm for touring with his own band, friction between all five members was apparent on

The late Charlie Watts was the quiet, reliable and brilliant backbeat of The Rolling Stones until, as a new authorised biography of the humble drummer reveals, he fell prey to the destructive addictions of his lifelong jazz heroes...

SUPPORT: Married in 1964, Charlie remained faithful to Shirley to the end 1986 album Dirty Work, a cold, unlovable record that was chronically short of memorable tunes and band chemistry.

By this time, Watts was four or five years into his escalating drug habit which, as he later admitted, was partly induced by the behaviour of his jazz heroes – many of whom linked their drug intake (marijuana and heroin, most commonly) with creativity.

"To be that brilliant and that destructive?" he pondered later in life. "There's something terribly glamorous about that. It's just the genius of it all."

Sexton believes fans only really noticed Charlie's increasingly self-destructive addiction when the Stones gathered to receive a Grammy award in 1986. "Charlie's heroin problem was kept completely out of the public eye in a way that I don't think could happen now," he says. "He was never completely out of it but he became a figure who, if he were a drinker, you would call a 'functioning alcoholic'."

Watts himself was lacerating about his own behaviour in an interview for Desert Island Discs, admitting: "I took a lot of drugs late in life and I didn't do it very well so I nearly lost the marriage and my life... I'm Dracula in the mid-80s. I saw it before I really got there."

"It's just a thing that frightens me actually. I can't explain it. I don't know why I did it... I used to go out at night. It was ridiculous. It was the life of a junkie... I'd live for three days and sleep for two... It [addiction] was always around me but I just wasn't interested. Then I had a sort of mid-life crisis and became another person."

What triggered the decision to pull himself back from the brink came in two very different forms. The first was what would now be called something approaching an intervention from Keith, as the Stones' guitarist later explained: "I told him, 'That's just not you Charlie.' And also, the main thing that really worried me about Charlie at the time was his drinking. Really heavy duty cognac and he was blowing up."

The second was an appeal for help from Ronnie Scott, the founder of the eponymous Soho jazz club which was going through a period of financial hardship in 1985. Wanting to give something back to the club he loved, which was in serious danger of closing, Watts rounded up a quite extraordinary array of musicians including Jack Bruce from Cream, pianist Stan Tracey, saxophonist Courtney Pine and vocalist (and long-time David Bowie collaborator) Gail Ann Dorsey.

With the addition of at least 30 other musicians, the Charlie Watts Orchestra was born, playing the first in a long series of critically-acclaimed concerts at the world-famous jazz club, the entire proceeds of which went into its coffers.

"If you listen to his album Live At Fulham Town Hall from 1986, you can really hear a man reviving," says Sexton. "He was still using drugs at the beginning of his orchestra gigs and recordings but I think it was a moment when he could see a way back."

"He told me when I interviewed him that the 'moment' came for him when he hurt his ankle when going down into his basement to get what he called, 'yet another bottle of wine'. He knew he had to work and couldn't do his concerts with an injury. So things went uphill from there. But he did it in his own quiet way – there was never any rehab."

Watts' new-found appreciation for the straight life went to an extreme; he later admitted to, "...giving up everything – even eating. I'm an all or nothing person and I lived on sultanas, water and nuts for about six months".

BUT THE combination of Richards and Ronnie Scott saw Watts re-energised, never missing a concert with The Rolling Stones until his final gig in Miami on August 30, 2019.

He would die at the age of 80 from complications relating to an operation. He remained married to his wife Shirley until the end, and was surrounded by his small family including his daughter Seraphina and his grand-daughter Charlotte.

"It was an incredible turnaround," concludes Sexton, who interviewed Watts around a dozen times between the early 1990s and 2019.

"The way Charlie came back from his problems is a testament to the fortitude of the man. He was intensely private so he fought his own battle – but he won when so many other rock stars have lost and died before their time."

"In the last interview I did with Mick Jagger, he told me he still couldn't quite comprehend how sudden Charlie's passing was. One minute they were talking about the cover design for an album reissue. And the next, as Mick put it, he was dead."

Despite Watts' passing, the Stones continue to tour, now with just two original members left and minus one of the most low-key rock'n'roll geniuses ever to have set foot on a stadium stage. As Keith Richards adds: "Some people are perfect as they are. They don't need stimulants... Charlie was immaculate, an immaculate conception – bless his heart."

The greatest mystery of all. Who was the real Agatha Christie?

The Miss Marple creator had a reputation for being as tricky as she was successful but, as her biographer LUCY WORSLEY came to discover, depression, betrayal and crippling nightmares dogged her life and helped inspire some of her stories

AS A little bookworm, I used to check out one of Agatha Christie's novels from the library as a treat at the start of every school holiday. During my childhood, I must have hoovered up dozens and dozens of her books thinking them undemanding fun.

Sunday evenings were all about David Suchet as Poirot on the television, with Hugh Fraser as his lovely, slightly gormless sidekick, Captain Hastings. It was wonderful entertainment and, like the books themselves, incredibly comforting.

For no matter how horrible the crime, Christie's stories guaranteed a neatly-wrapped package of resolution at the end. Happy days. Of course, as I grew up, I realised the Queen of Crime's stories were far more than simply entertainment, though they excelled at that. They also capture how society changed – especially for women – over the course of a turbulent 20th century, something I hope I reflect in my new biography of history's best-selling novelist.

Before I started my research, I hadn't appreciated quite what a long life Agatha Christie lived. Born in Victorian England in September 1890, by the time she died in January 1976 aged 85, she was a global celebrity alongside people like The Rolling Stones. Yet despite her unimaginable success, there's always been something about Christie that has seen her placed in a box marked "difficult women".

Indeed, as I began my journey into the treasure trove of her private letters and notebooks that survive in her family's care, I confess I was a little worried. Perhaps Agatha Christie was too successful, a little too super-talented, to warm to?

I began to change my mind as I increasingly got to know her through her correspondence. While in person she was quiet and shy, and could perhaps be misconstrued as stand-offish, on paper she was chatty and vulnerable.

She was born the youngest of three children to parents of substance in Torquay, then an elegant seaside resort where her wealthy family enjoyed a privileged life in their villa, Ashfield.

But their financial situation worsened and, at 11, Agatha lost her father Frederick to pneumonia and kidney disease.

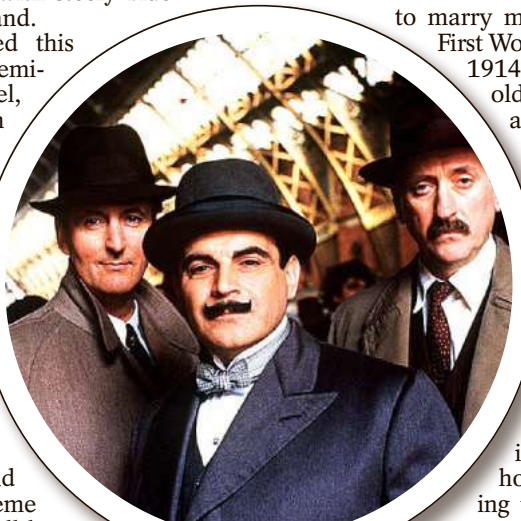

IT WAS the end of her childhood, and she began to suffer from terrifying nightmares that would come to inform her fiction. Christie would dream she was playing with her now-widowed mother Clara, or having tea with her, as normal. Then, she would look up into her mother's face, only to find she had suddenly and mysteriously turned into a stranger. "Mummy" had become a man, with steely blue eyes, and a missing hand.

She later described this fearful fantasy in a semi-autobiographical novel, Unfinished Portrait, in 1934: "From the sleeve of her mother's dress came, Oh horror! – that horrible stump. It wasn't Mummy. It was the Gunman".

This "Gunman" was the name Christie gave her nightmare.

And aspects of the character would become a central theme of her work. Nearly all her books feature an outwardly nice, respectable, friendly person... who suddenly switches to the opposite of all those things. Someone capable of murder.

A young woman like Agatha was expected to marry money. But when the First World War broke out in 1914, the then 23-year-old quickly volunteered as a nurse. It was another experience that would inform her fiction.

In her second book, The Secret Adversary, published in January 1922, and introducing her young mystery solvers Tommy and Tuppence, its heroine (Tuppence) starts hospital life by washing up 649 plates a day, progresses to waiting on tables in the canteen, and graduates to sweeping an actual ward.

Christie herself had a similar experience, though she was eventually promoted to the hospital dispensary, doing the responsible job of mixing medicines. This inspired one of my favourite Christie characters, the auburn-haired Cynthia who entices Hastings into her dispensary in her first novel – and Hercule Poirot's first case: The Mysterious Affair At Styles.

By now, Christie was a wife and mother. She'd married a war hero, Archie Christie, and given birth to their daughter Rosalind in 1919. And at 30, she had become a published and soon to be best-selling author.

She'd written novels for fun since childhood, but Styles was the first to get published – and even that was a slow process. Quite extraordinarily, given its subsequent success, it was four years before a publisher picked it up.

She now produced in quick succession a series of novels that captured a roaring decade. Christie was a bit too old to be a flapper, but she shared some flapper values. She was a good dancer, and she was into sport. She swam was the support she received from her archaeologist second husband.

He was 14 years her junior, and she was always the main breadwinner. But in return, he was always on her side. She needed this, because since that early loss of her father, Christie had possessed an emotional fragility, though she hid it well.

She had married Max in the aftermath of the second great crisis of her life (after her father's death), which came in 1926. That year, her first husband Archibald, who'd served in the Royal Flying Corps, betrayed her.

Christie had been in a dark place that year after the death of her mother, and under pressure to turn out more books like her 1926 masterpiece, The Murder Of Roger Ackroyd. But Archie wasn't able to offer any support. Instead, he announced that he was leaving her, for a woman ten years younger, with whom he played golf. All the clichés!

Christie began to experience what we would now call a deep depression.

On a dark December night, she left the substantial family home in Sunningdale, Berkshire. The next morning, her abandoned Morris was found near a steep cliff in the Surrey downs. The police suspected she was in peril, or even dead. Perhaps by her own hand. Or perhaps at the hands of her cheating husband?

THERE was a national manhunt, and 11 days later, Christie was found, alive and well, but living under a false name in the Old Swan hotel in the Yorkshire spa town of Harrogate. Journalists could hardly credit that she'd "lost her memory" as she claimed.

It seemed incredibly lame, especially after the huge search, for which hundreds of policemen and members of the public had volunteered their time.

To cynical hacks, it seemed much more likely Christie had disappeared deliberately. Maybe she'd wanted publicity for her books? Or possibly she'd hidden herself away in order to frame her cheating husband for her murder?

Under pressure, Christie reluctantly claimed she had made an attempt to take her own life – driving her car towards the edge of a cliff – but couldn't go through with it.

The incident, she said, had shocked her into wanting to live, yet she couldn't bear to return to her traumatic life as the bereaved, betrayed, Mrs Christie. So she'd run away.

It was an awful, dark time, exacerbated when the media turned against her, telling their version of the story rather than her own. Millions of readers came to believe she may have been a great writer, but that she was somehow a tricky human being.

If you'd have met Agatha Christie in later life, you might well have mistaken her for her heroine Miss Marple: a kindly-looking old lady enjoying a cream tea in the garden of her Devon home, Greenway.

But she knew darkness and pain, intimately. And overcoming that betrayal and public shaming in 1926, I think, reveals her true strength of character. That's why, while Agatha Christie had an extraordinary talent, I can also feel a sense of kinship with her.

– once she even travelled to Hawaii to go surfing – and she loved fast cars. Nothing, she said, ever gave her more joy than her “Dear little bottle-nosed Morris Cowley”.

Some of my favourite early characters reflect the young, confident, beautiful Christie, like Dulcie in Murder On The Links, in her “rakish little red hat”, her lips “quite impossibly scarlet”.

Agatha's first marriage broke up and, aged 38, she made an adventurous journey, alone, to Iraq. There she had a whirlwind romance with the young archaeologist, Max Mallowan, who became her second husband. Travelling with Max widened her horizons. A trip to Egypt inspired Death On The Nile. And, during a train journey home from Istanbul, Murder On The Orient Express was born.

After the Second World War, Christie branched out from novels to write for the stage, producing ingenious, reliably-entertaining plays like The Mousetrap. Amazingly – lockdowns excepted – it is still running in the West End. But she also went on writing the stories that were increasingly in demand by TV and film producers. For those old enough to remember the 60s, Miss Marple was played by the great comedienne, Margaret Rutherford.

For me, watching with my granny, Joan Hickson was the redoubtable puzzle solver, or Julia McKenzie, or (my own special favourite!) Geraldine McEwan.

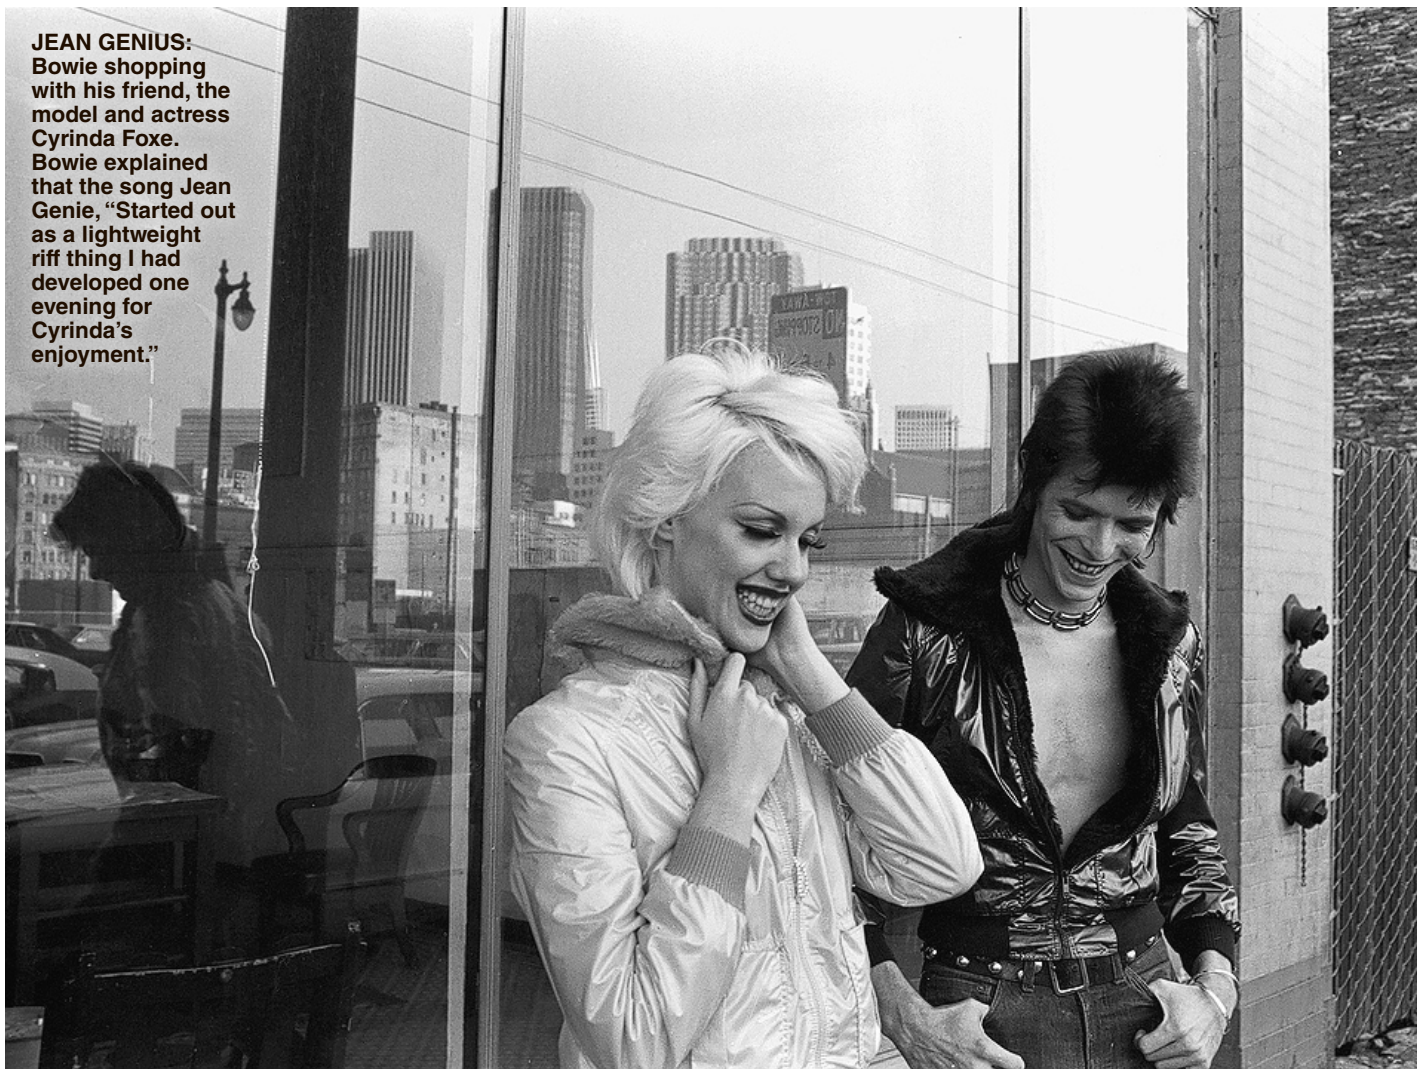

By the age of 80, Christie had published a staggering 80 books. She was the first crime writer to have 100,000 copies of 10 of her titles published by Penguin on the same day in 1948; and is listed as the best-selling fiction writer of all time, having sold more than two billion copies in 44 languages.

One of the last in her lifetime, Passenger To Frankfurt – a standalone published in September 1970, and featuring the adventurer Sir Stafford Nye – spent an incredible six months on the bestsellers list. By now, it had become a ritual for millions of fans to buy the annual “Christie for Christmas”.

When she died in 1976, her husband of 45 years by her side, it was the top story on the evening news. But the more I looked into her personal life, the more I realised Agatha wasn't quite the tower of strength she seems at first appearance. Essential to her success

EXCLUSIVE By John Earls

DAVID BOWIE is revered as one of the most inventive talents British music has ever produced. But it wasn't until the colourful singer invented his alter-ego of the alien Ziggy Stardust that his career really took off. The 50th anniversary of Bowie's landmark album, The Rise And Fall Of Ziggy Stardust And The Spiders From Mars, is being celebrated with a documentary film, its soundtrack album and a new candid photo memoir offering a rare glimpse into the usually private star's thoughts – all of which are titled Moonage Daydream.

Taken by top music photographer Mick Rock, the images captured the Ziggy Stardust tour by Bowie and his backing band, The Spiders From Mars. Originally from Hull, Bowie's band also became aliens for the 1972 tour – but Bowie fondly remembers their down-to-earth roots in the book.

Bowie writes of guitarist Mick Ronson: "If I ever suggested going to see an art show, something theatrical or even a new band, Mick would consistently reply, 'I don't want to, 'cause I don't need to'."

Despite their differing outlooks, the tour was one of the most influential in music history.

Bowie's alter-ego paved the way for stars from Bono to Lady Gaga to transform their personalities on stage.

Rock, who also photographed the likes of Queen, The Sex Pistols and Blondie before his death in 2021, was with the Spiders tour throughout.

The photographer wrote of Bowie's success: "It was all so unlikely, given the context of the times: the carrot-coloured hairdo and the jumpsuit, the red plastic boots and the mismatched eyeballs. No seasoned betting man would have backed this one." Bowie died in 2016 aged just 69 and never published an autobiography.

Written in 2002, his memories of the Spiders tour – which famously ended at Hammersmith Odeon on July 3, 1973, with an on-stage announcement that they were splitting up – are as close as the singer got to revealing his thoughts about his fame.

In an exclusive extract from the photo memoir, Bowie's comments on the photos document how he went from promising singer-songwriter to other-worldly superstar.

● Moonage Daydream: The Life And Times Of Ziggy Stardust by David Bowie and Mick Rock is published by Genesis Publications. An exhibition of its photos runs from September 21 at London's Atlas Photography Gallery

LENSMAN: Mick Rock

BITING WIT: Left, Bowie plays Mick Ronson's guitar with his teeth. The singer recalled: "Inevitably and comically, there came a time when Mick's arms grew tired from holding his guitar at shoulder height. It slid slowly back down to his groin. I didn't stop munching. Mick Rock got his picture and a new guitar 'bit' was born."

LOVING THE ALIEN: Right, Bowie in his Ziggy finery onstage in June 1973. Photographer Rock recalled: "David didn't have a clue what the Japanese writing said on his cloak. We recently discovered it said 'David Bowie'!"

NICE ONE, RONSON: Above, an early Spiders From Mars gig at the then London Poly on May 17, 1972. "I rarely pre-warned the band of things I might get up to, as they were often shot down before they were even hatched," said Bowie.

THE MAN WHO CHANGED THE MUSIC WORLD

THERE'S A STARMAN: Bowie studies his reflection at home in Beckenham. Ziggy Stardust's iconic red hair was inspired by a model for designer Kansai Yamamoto who Bowie saw on a Japanese magazine cover. He explained: "I copied not the only colour but the cut from this cover. I've read that the Ziggy cut came from a number of different sources, or from a local hairdresser in Bromley or Beckenham. Absolute tosh!"

STONE ME: Above, Bowie and Mick Jagger share a joke at the end-of-tour party at London's Café Royal on July 4, 1973. "I have absolutely no recollection of this party, except I do remember feeling incredibly relieved it was all over," Bowie recalls in the book.

FLASHES TO ASHES: Right, Bowie gets changed before a gig in Chicago. He joked: "On many occasions, having dressed for the show, I would be virtually indistinguishable from my rented surroundings."

FLOWER POWER: Bowie in the gardens outside his flat in Beckenham, Kent. The singer recalled: "The major bonus of the flat was the use of the huge, sprawling communal gardens. Weather permitting, it became a major party venue."

CIGGY STARDUST: Above, Bowie smokes on a train from London to Aberdeen in this shot from May 15, 1973. He said of Rock's image: "Ziggy on British Rail en route to Scotland. A great juxtaposition and a great photo-op."

Is there anything you're yearning to know? Send your questions, on any subject, to the contacts given below, and we will do our best to answer them...

Q Please settle an argument – where is our longest pier?
C Pope, Isle of Wight

A It's in the new city of Southend-on-Sea in Essex, and by some stretch. It is a bracing 1.33 mile walk (2,158m) to reach the end of its Grade II listed iron pier, and it costs adults £2 for the pleasure, or £5.80 for a return train ticket out into the Thames Estuary. Prince Charles unveiled the new pier train in March, which has been named after Sir David Amess, the local MP who was murdered last year. Sir John Betjeman, the first president of the National Piers Society, said "the Pier is Southend, and Southend is the Pier", and it claims to be the longest pleasure pier in the world. It's some way off Progreso Pier in Mexico, which, at four miles, was designed for docking cargo ships.

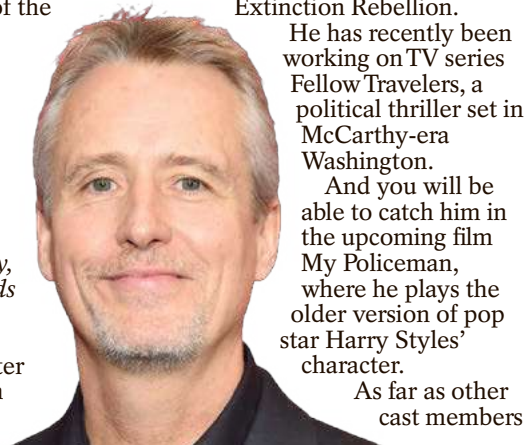

Our second longest is in Southport, Merseyside, (1,108m), Walton-on-the-Naze in Essex is third at around half a mile (792m), Ryde in the Isle of Wight is next and Llandudno in North Wales is the fifth.

At the beginning of the 20th century, around 100 hundred piers existed, but only half remain. The National Piers Society voted Bangor Garth pier in Wales its pier of the year.

11, but didn't take up acting seriously until the 1990s. From 2008-2012, he starred as ADA Michael Cutter in the Law And Order franchise, and went on to have TV roles in Vikings, Homeland and Summer Of Rockets, and picked up a Golden Globe nomination for his performance as Robert Kennedy in RFK. In 2010, he returned to the cobbles as Ken's long-lost son, sharing the screen with his half-brother James – William's youngest son – who was playing Ken's grandson.

Linus, 58, is also an environmental activist and was arrested in 2019 in Times Square after joining a protest with Extinction Rebellion.

He has recently been working on TV series Fellow Travelers, a political thriller set in McCarthy-era Washington.

And you will be able to catch him in the upcoming film My Policeman, where he plays the older version of pop star Harry Styles' character.

As far as other cast members go, Chris Noth, who was Mike Logan, landed a role in The Good Wife and famously went on to play Mr Big in Sex And The City.

Benjamin Bratt, who played Detective Rey Curtis, starred in Miss Congeniality alongside Sandra Bullock, but was perhaps better known for his love life, with a high-profile relationship with Julia Roberts in the 1990s.

He went on to wed Talisa Soto, who starred in Licence To Kill.

Q Many towering gasometers have disappeared but I've often wondered how they worked and how the gas didn't escape.

David Johnson, Stanford-le-Hope, Essex

A Gas holders are a British invention and appeared on our landscape 200 years ago. Gas was made by baking coal at gas works in towns and cities, so it was known as "town gas".

It was pumped into the gasometers, forcing the giant, round storage tanks to rise with a concertina action.

They would sink back down as the gas was used, notably in evenings to light and heat homes, and you may remember them being very low on Sunday afternoons, as roast dinners were prepared. It is a clever, yet simple, design.

The chambers sit on a giant tank of water – imagine an upside-down bucket floating in your bath – so the rims are sealed and there is no room for air inside, and the gas can't escape.

Town gas stopped being used after natural gas was discovered in the North Sea in 1965, which was transported through pipes.

Most gasometers have been dismantled, but some are enjoying a second life.

Three Victorian gas holder frames at King's Cross have been turned into luxury apartments, with a one-bed flat costing £1million.

Others are listed too, such as the iconic Oval Cricket gas holder, which was the world's largest when it was built in 1847.

John Brennan of Huddersfield recalls being in college in the 1950s and his English master would recite a verse that began "Do you remember an inn, Miranda". In this poem the tarantella is a dance for two inspired by the spasms induced by a tarantula bite.

TARANTELLA

Hilaire Belloc
(1923)

Do you remember an Inn,
Miranda? Do you remember an Inn?
And the bedding and the spreading
Of the straw for a bedding,
And the fleas that tease in the High Pyrenees,
And the wine that tasted of the tar?
And the cheers and the jeers of the young muleteers
(Under the vine of the dark verandah)?
Do you remember an Inn, Miranda,
Do you remember an Inn? And the cheers and the jeers of the young muleteers Who hadn't got a penny, And who weren't paying any,
And the hammer at the doors and the din?
And the hip! Hop! Hop! Of the clap
Of the hands to the twirl and the swirl
Of the girl gone chancing, Glancing, Dancing,
Backing and advancing,
Snapping of the clapper to the spin
Out and in – And the ting, tong, tang of the guitar!
Do you remember an Inn, Miranda?
Do you remember an Inn? Never more; Miranda, Never more.
Only the high peaks hoar: And Aragon a torrent at the door.
No sound In the walls of the halls where falls
The tread Of the feet of the dead to the ground,
No sound: But the boom Of the far waterfall like doom.

BEACHCOMBER 105 YEARS OF UNPUNCTUATED EXCELLENCE...

WHEN two people are contesting one of the nation's vital offices of state, the mood is tense as the decision affects us all. When the rivalry is between two established national figures whose views have long been in conflict, the contest may become heated.

I am referring to the election for the appointment of Apostrophinder General, a post vacant since 1664. That was the year in which the last holder of the post, the notorious Sir Nathaniel Grope, was put to death for the capital offence of falsifying the King's commas. Grope was the third Apostropher Royal and instituted the post of Apostrophiser General to hunt down and destroy rogue apostrophes. He had argued that different skills were required to count missing apostrophes from the skills needed to count apostrophes inserted where they had no right to be, and he appointed himself Apostrophinder General to draw a clear punctuational boundary between the two tasks. His downfall came when he was found to be illicitly welding rogue apostrophes to full stops to create semi-colons, which evaded the Conjunction Charge payable on all semi-colons that replaced conjunctions.

The post of Apostrophinder General has been vacant since Grope's death, the only execution ever to have been carried out by apostrophisation, which involved pelting his body with sharpened commas.

For the past 350 years, the function of the Apostrophinder has been replaced by an annual apostrophe count, but under a 17th century edict it must be brought back after a three-year apostrophic count hiatus due to Covid lockdowns.

The two contenders for the post are the current Apostropher Royal, Sir D'Anville O'M'Darlin', and his bitter rival the Ombudswoman for Conjunctions, Lady Ampersandra Notwith-Standing whose very name Sir D'Anville cannot utter without snarling when he gets to the hyphen. The appointment will be made by a small committee, so secret that the names of its members have never been published.

They are rumoured to include royal appointees Grey Stick in Waiting, who carries the grey stick on which the door of the House of Commons may be pounded if Black Rod forgets to bring his black rod, and Royal Blue Permanent, Keeper of the Royal Stationery Cupboard in which is kept the portfolio the Minister Without Portfolio doesn't have.

When the new Apostrophinder takes office, one of his or her first vital decisions will be whether to abolish the role again when the apostrophe counts resume. Until then, the nation can only wait with bated punctuation.

Outspoken MP mired in scandal

Picture: GETTY; EXPRESSTAR

FAR-RIGHT: Shaw wanted to reinstate the death penalty

David Shaw

Former Conservative MP for Dover

BORN NOVEMBER 14, 1950 –
DIED AUGUST 23, 2022, AGED 71

DAVID Shaw was MP for Dover for 10 years and became one of the most controversial figures in the party with his constant demands for privatisation. He also unwittingly became entangled in a Commons sex scandal after taking on Pamela Bordes as an unpaid researcher. Bordes had flings with an arms dealer, a Tory minister and at least one national newspaper editor.

In March 1989 the Daily Express ran an exclusive revealing that Bordes had socialised with Gaddafi Al-Dam, an arms buyer in the Libyan Security Service.

Although she apparently did not know the then Libyan leader, Colonel Gaddafi personally, there were concerns that she sought out powerful figures in the media and within the Tory government.

Quite how Mr Shaw came to introduce her to the Commons has never been fully explained, but as far as he was concerned she was an enthusiastic assistant who wanted to know more about British democracy.

Indian-born Bordes, who was divorced from French businessman

Henri Bordes, did not deny she was a high-class girl in many interviews she gave as the scandal unfolded.

As the scandal unravelled, Shaw sought to stop a female photographer from the now discontinued Today newspaper from taking his picture and was fined £180 for assault. The paper dubbed him the “vilest” MP in Britain.

At Parliament he earned a reputation as the ruthless “number one smear merchant” as he poured scorned on opposition MPs at every opportunity.

Shaw actively campaigned for the death penalty to be restored and incessantly demanded the privatisation of British Rail and British Gas.

He opposed the building of the Channel Tunnel and was outspoken against ferry workers when they went on strike to demand better pay and conditions.

After qualifying as an accountant he became a merchant banker with County Bank and founded the financial advisers Sabrelance.

While serving as a Tory councillor at Kingston Upon Thames his restructuring of management saved hundreds of thousands of pounds. Elected for Dover in 1986, Shaw used his knowledge of business to serve on several committees but in 1997 was swept away in Tony Blair’s landslide victory.

In 1986 he married Dr Lesley Brown. He died after a long illness and is survived by his wife and their daughter and son.

Virginia Patton

Actress

BORN JUNE 25, 1925 –
DIED AUGUST 18, 2022, AGED 97

ACTRESS Virginia Patton played opposite James Stewart as George Bailey’s sister-in-law Ruth in 1946 classic It’s A Wonderful Life.

Born in Cleveland, Ohio, her father Donald was an accomplished singer.

In 1948 Patton appeared in the Western movie Black Eagle but she quit Hollywood the following year after marrying wealthy businessman Cruse W Moss.

Asked why she chose to forgo stardom, the actress said she wanted a “wonderful” husband, “wonderful” children and to be part of the community in Michigan where she ran a successful investment and real estate holding.

Patton is survived by two children, Carol and Michael.

Dark horse beat legends to role

CONVENT-educated Pauline Stroud shot to stardom after playing the lead female role in Lady Godiva Rides Again.

Up-and-coming Joan Collins had sought the role along with Audrey Hepburn, but neither could compete with Stroud to play shy waitress Marjorie Clark in the 1951 film.

Clark emerges from obscurity to ride “naked” on the back of a horse in a pageant. She goes on to win a beauty contest and becomes a national celebrity.

However, the film’s story ends with her playing the Godiva character nude in a seedy theatre as her showbusiness ambitions flounder.

British comedy stars in the cast included Sid James, George Cole and Dora Bryan.

Also in the cast was Ruth Ellis, who was pregnant at the time. Ellis was the last woman to be hanged in Britain for murder.

Born in Tunbridge Wells, Kent,

Pauline Stroud

Actress

BORN MARCH 21, 1930 –
DIED SEPTEMBER 4, 2022, AGED 92

INSTANT FAME: Stroud

Stroud’s father Leslie was an accountant, and at first she was educated at a convent.

However, her mother Daisy moved Pauline to a private school as she did not feel she was suited to the sisterhood.

The star learned acting at Rada in London and toured in rep for a time, while taking on small roles in films.

She played a nurse in the 1959 film Life In Emergency Ward 10 and a barmaid in The Heart Of A Man in the same year.

From 1960 until 1972, Stroud appeared in many television dramas, including The Sullivan Brothers and A World Of Comedy.

Despite her big break in Lady Godiva Rides Again, she struggled for more major roles and earned extra money working at Covent Garden as an extra in operas and ballets.

She had a long relationship with cruise director Barry Woodward, who died in 2002.

Tim Page

War photographer

BORN MAY 25, 1944 –
DIED AUGUST 24, 2022, AGED 78

TIM Page’s pictures from the frontline of the Vietnam War were widely credited with helping to bring an end to the fighting, saving many lives.

Never concerned for his own safety, his images of wounded civilians in particular shocked the American public. He worked for Life magazine and US wire agency UPI, which meant his photos reached countless newspapers and journals across the world.

Continually putting himself in the line of fire meant he suffered many injuries, mostly from shrapnel. He lost feeling in his face when a large piece of shrapnel was removed from his brain, but after recovery he was able to work again.

Born in Tunbridge Wells, Kent, he grew up in the commuter town of Orpington. He was adopted after his biological father was killed in the Second World War.

Page ran away from home at 16 and in 1963 found himself in Laos where he began smuggling pictures out of the burgeoning civil war.

A few years later he was moved to Saigon by UPI and he shared a flat with film star Errol Flynn’s son Sean, who was working as a photographer for Paris Match magazine.

They took many drugs, perhaps to help them deal with the assignments they went on to see fighting at close hand.

Page sustained severe injuries while a frontline war photographer in Vietnam and was the inspiration behind the character played by Dennis Hopper in the epic film Apocalypse Now.

He later covered conflicts in Afghanistan, Israel and Timor.

He is survived by his Australian partner Marianne Harris.

When they reach the stranded whale, Cap'n Binnacle is amazed to find a group of Beachcombers keeping it cool with buckets of water. "Sand sprites!" he cries. "I've often heard tale of them but never actually seen one before ..."

"We've seen you!" says Tad. "Collecting shells and old driftwood down by the water's edge." "Aye!" nods the Captain. There are lots of interesting things carried in on the tide, though I've never found anything as big as a whale.

"I've seen a lot of whales before But none were stranded on the shore!"

"Sand sprites!" the Captain says. "So you Are real! The tales I've heard are true..."

THE ALPHABEATER

CAN you crack the Alphabeater? It's a tough twist on our popular Alphapuzzle, designed to stretch your mental muscles to the limit. Each grid number below represents a letter or a black square. As in Alphapuzzle, every letter of the alphabet is used. But now you have to complete the grid too! Use the given letters and the given black squares below the main grid to start.

To add to the fiendish fun, Alphabeater is 'rotationally symmetrical'. In other words the grid is the same if you turn the page upside down.

So, for example if there is a six-letter word Across which starts in the top left corner, there will be a corresponding six-letter word Across which ends in the bottom right corner square.

Every black square has a symmetrical 'twin' but the 'twin' may not always share the same number. This can help identify other black squares. Of course if the centre square is black it has no corresponding 'twin'. Solution next Saturday.

NARCISSUS
'GRAND
SOLEIL D'OR'

Right bulb moment

HYACINTH

Looking for the perfect gift? Everyone loves a bowl of flowering bulbs – especially if you've grown them yourself

NARCISSUS
'PAPERWHITE'

Taking a bottle of wine to someone who has invited you around for dinner is all very well, but why not impress them with a bowl of flowering bulbs that you have grown yourself?

All kinds of bulbs are available now but there are a few particular types that lend themselves to being given as presents since they flower in time for Christmas.

What you are looking for are prepared hyacinths that have been heat-treated to encourage them to flower early, or else two particular varieties of narcissus.

Prepared hyacinths should be potted up individually in 3-4in pots of multipurpose compost, then kept cool and dark. Bring them out into a cool, bright room when the flower spikes have cleared and the bulbs are just beginning to show colour.

At this point, you can group several that are flowering at the same time in a decorative container. This solves the common problem of a bowlful of bulbs flowering at different times.

To avoid toppling flower spikes, remember to keep the bulbs in the coolest but brightest place possible when brought indoors. 'Delft Blue', 'Jan Bos' (rich pink) and 'L'Innocence' (white) are among the oldest varieties but they are still reliable. Oh, and the scent is almost as impressive as fine wine.

The two varieties of narcissus are 'Paperwhite' and 'Grand Soleil d'Or'. The first, as its name implies, is pure white, and the second is brilliant golden yellow.

Pot the bulbs up now by simply stuffing them cheek by jowl into 6in clay flowerpots, so their noses are just showing above the compost. Allow a gap of an inch between the surface of the compost and rim of the pot for later watering.

Now put them somewhere cool and dark for about three or four weeks before the flower stems become visible. What I like to do is pot these bulbs up in batches so that a succession of flowers keeps coming. Potted up now, they are likely to be flowering in less than two months.

GARDENER'S DIARY

Your weekly gardening to-do list

- Conference and other early pears are ready to pick as soon as they lift easily off the tree. Don't wrench them – if they hold tight, they aren't ready. They will keep for a few weeks in a cool shed or the salad drawer at the bottom of the fridge. To bring them to the right stage for eating, move them to a warm room and they will ripen a few days later.
- Before the autumn planting season, prepare soil for new shrub or rose borders, a new fruit garden or a trench for a new hedge.
- Nip out the growing point at the top of greenhouse tomatoes' main stem. This will stop further growth and encourage the existing crop to swell and ripen.

PLANT of the week

Michaelmas daisies

These get their name because Michaelmas Day (September 29) falls right in the middle of their flowering season.

They provide colour in borders and attract bees and butterflies. They can be tall and ungainly, so need supporting, and they are martyrs to mildew so they also need spraying. But don't let that put you off all perennial asters. Some look just like Michaelmas daisies and are equally free flowering, but are far more compact, self-supporting and mildew tolerant.

SPOTLIGHT ON... storing seeds

If you want to cut down on your gardening bill, here's a tip that will save pounds – don't throw away half-empty packets of veg or flower seeds. Store them to use next year.

There's no point storing seeds that you've left out in the greenhouse as the heat, damp and light will have taken their toll. But you can save seeds you've kept safely indoors in dry conditions and at a fairly steady temperature. Find a large screw-top glass jar or airtight biscuit tin and pack part-used packets inside, along with any unopened packets. If possible, add a sachet of silica gel to absorb any moisture.

Kept in this way, most veg and flower seeds will come up a year later but don't expect quite such a high percentage to germinate as usual – it pays to sow them slightly thicker than normal to make up for it.

You can also save vegetable, flower or herb seeds from plants in your garden.

Let the seed heads dry out, then gently separate the seeds from the husks and store inside dry paper envelopes with the name written on the front.

Store home-saved seeds in an inside dry drawer, rather than a jar.

It is worth saving seed from true botanical species such as fennel, dill or chervil, hardy annual flowers and open-pollinated vegetables, particularly old-fashioned varieties of peas, runners and broad beans.

Nicknamed America's Steel City – Pittsburgh was once the world's leading producer of the stuff – my preconceptions of a rusting metropolis living on its past blue-collar glories were completely blown away as we emerged from the Fort Pitt Tunnel to be greeted with a stunning panorama of downtown Pittsburgh as we drove on to a bridge.

Set at the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers which join to form the Ohio, Pittsburgh boasts some 446 bridges, more than any other city in the world and earning it another nickname, 'City of Bridges'.

The steel industry in the region declined decades ago and in its place leading tech companies such as Apple, Google and Uber are turning the city's South Side into Pennsylvania's own mini Silicon Valley. There's a modern, sleek edge to the place now, although it still has a charisma you won't find in other well-known US cities.

And with the reinstatement of British Airways' direct service from London Heathrow to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania's second biggest city is now more accessible than ever.

The superb downtown views are even more spectacular at night, especially when there's a live baseball game at PNC Park. Sitting on the banks of the Allegheny, the 38,000 seat stadium is the home of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The night we touched down, the New York Yankees were in town but our late evening landing meant missing out on

Beyond the Pirates, the city is home to the Penguins (ice hockey), Steelers (NFL) and Riverhounds (soccer). All the teams' strips feature black and yellow colours, while their influence can be seen on virtually every corner of the city – even many of the main bridges are yellow.

WHAT: Rohan Men's Advance Jeans, £100, rohan.com

WHERE: Alaska and Seattle, USA.

EXPERIENCE: The Milton Keynes firm's latest incarnation of jeans designed for travelling in are made with Thermolite and Coolmax temperature regulating technology, which warms up a chilly day and takes the heat out of a hot one.

Which is pretty much perfect for an early summer cruise ship visit to Alaska, where all four seasons in a day is entirely feasible!

The polycotton blend has elastane to add some forgiving stretch for comfort – they felt like a second skin – and offers shape recovery so you don't look like you've slept in your clothes, even if you actually have done so on the long flight there!

Having napped on the way out to join the ship in Seattle they looked fresh on arrival, and they were just as good after a much longer sleep on the return flight to Heathrow.

I really liked the security of the hidden zipped rear pocket for my wallet and, having worn them every day in Alaska and Seattle (bar one day when they needed laundering after a muddy 4x4 off-road kart driving experience in an Alaskan rainforest), they stood up to a very packed itinerary of The Last Frontier tours and excursions and sightseeing in the city, yet remained smart casual enough for some less formal bars and restaurants on the ship.

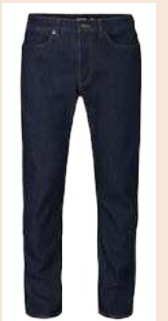

My skinny jeans days are over, so these were spot on fit-wise – neither too baggy nor too tight.

Alaska was remarkably rain-free, but I did get wet in a Seattle 'walk-through' water feature in a city square and they dried reasonably quickly afterwards, as per the fast-drying claim.

Available in black, dark denim and mid denim.

QUIBBLES: None.

VERDICT: Brilliant travel jeans, will be a go-to on trips for years. 10/10

HOT HOTEL

Royal Apollonia Limassol, Cyprus

BY LUCY WILLIAMSON

Heart & Limassol

Vibe

Calm, confident and classy. The five-star Royal Apollonia hotel in Limassol, Cyprus, gives a sense that they know what they are doing, without having to boast about it.

And that quiet confidence is backed up. Part of the Louis Hotel Group, it has 77 years' experience in luxury hotels in Cyprus and Greece. Yet it manages to maintain its family-run feel. From the front desk to the bartenders, the smiling staff have an unfailing warmth.

Akin to the feeling of stepping off the plane for the first time and being met by sunshine and your grandma who refuses to let you go hungry. It's unsurprising that some guests choose to come back year after year.

Style

Wherever you are in the hotel, you get 180 degree views of the twinkling Mediterranean. And yet there was a tranquil sense of privacy.

The clever alcoves around the figure-of-eight-shaped pool allow quieter areas that nestle you into a world of retreat. The hardest choice of the day will be whether you want to be closer to the private beach or the pool.

Opt for the pool to enjoy the ever-luxurious swim-up bar. The pool-bar cocktails, particularly the signature Cyprus Sky, are well-mixed and pleasingly strong.

COMFORT Rooms with a view

Rooms

The 204 rooms draw on contemporary styling to achieve an understated sense of luxury. If you can, book one of the rooms with its own private Jacuzzi.

Sipping on the complimentary bubbles amid the bubbles looking out on that view will have you feeling like a modern-day Aphrodite. More than just a place to freshen up, the well-serviced rooms, complete with all the luxury bathroom amenities, give off romantic energy, which can even be enjoyed alone.

“I was lathered in 'Dead Sea' mud before relaxing in a warm room

While the huge, open plan, bright lobby gives off an energetic opulence, the spa hidden away below is shrouded in a cosy and relaxed atmosphere enhanced by its design in wood and stone.

Access to the fitness room, pool, steam room and sauna are free of charge for hotel guests.

I also opted for the Dead Sea mud experience, meant to be great for eczema. I was lathered head to toe in mud before relaxing in a warming room that emulates the exact conditions of the Dead Sea.

What to do

Situated in Limassol, the second-largest city on the island, The Royal Apollonia is a short drive from the city centre and within walking distance from the tourist area where bars and restaurants are found in abundance.

You might not instantly associate Cyprus with wine but it's heavenly when tasted overlooking the mountain peaks of Troodos, facing the magnificent Mount Olympus at the Vassiliades winery. Just try not to be taken in by the Zivania, the perilous Cypriot pomace brandy at up to 60% proof.

If you fancy a stop on the way, the Agrovino Tavern in the tucked-away village of Lofou is a must with its delicious meze dishes from the family-run, rustic taverna. The village itself offers beautiful honey-coloured stone cottages lining steep cobbled streets. A quintessential Cypriot village – or like a real-life Mamma Mia! film set to you and me.

And if you're after more history, follow the Limassol coastline to the ancient city of Amathus, Kolossi Castle and the amphitheatre at Kourion.

MOTORING

email express.motors@reachplc.com ● twitter @expressmotoring

Honda is one of my favourite motor companies. I've never owned one of its cars, but I've had at least 15 bikes.

There have been many cars I'd have liked to have owned, from the original NSX sports car, through almost all Civic Type Rs, to the brilliant Integra Type R.

But although Honda is very consistent with its bikes, the four-wheel side of the business can be rather slipshod when it comes to its planning record.

For example, Honda made one of the world's most interesting hybrids – the CR-Z – then knocked it on the head after only a few years.

It also built the S2000 roadster that immediately became a cult car, then killed it off because it couldn't be bothered to re-engineer it to meet new emissions rules.

Then there's the Civic.

Honda seems to have had a rethink with every generation of this model, never setting down a true bloodline.

Over the last few generations the hatchback has had styling that looks like it was done by someone wearing kaleidoscope glasses. But now all is forgiven.

Because the new 11th generation Civic is an outstandingly good car and contains some proper old-school Honda engineering.

It's still not the best looking

THE FACTS

Honda Civic Advance

Price: £32,995

Engine: 2.0-litre four-cylinder petrol, 141bhp, plus 181bhp electric motor

0-62mph: 8.1sec

Fuel consumption: 56.5mpg

Co2: 114g/km

Honda has regained a sense of Civic pride

hatchback you can buy, but it's less eccentric than recent efforts and not unpleasant on the eye.

First let's delve under the bonnet at some Honda cleverness. The engine itself is pretty conventional – a 2.0-litre naturally-aspirated four-cylinder that produces 141bhp.

The Civic (until the high performance Type R version arrives later) is only available as a hybrid. The clever bit starts now. The petrol engine spins a generator that provides the energy for a 181bhp electric motor which drives the front wheels. Nice one.

And there is no gearbox on the car. For most of the time the electric motor does all the work, but at steady high speeds the petrol engine connects to the driven wheels via a clutch and drives them directly.

It gets even cleverer. The car would sound pretty odd, if not annoying, if the petrol engine simply whirled away making electricity – so Honda's boffins have engineered in some fake gear-change points so when you accelerate, it sounds like the car is working its way through a conventional manual gearbox.

It's extremely effective and makes the engine sound almost as interesting as the V-TEC unit used in many powerful Hondas past.

There are paddles behind the steering wheel, but these are used to select different levels of regenerative braking. This clever engineering makes for an interesting powertrain, but of course the real point is economy.

It works on that front, too, because you will have no trouble managing 60mpg in the new Civic even though the official figure is 56mpg.

The new Civic is the longest car in its class and has the lowest roofline, too. Looks fine to me. There's plenty of space inside including generous rear legroom and a 820-litre boot.

Up on the flight deck you have plenty of buttons and switches and an infotainment area of average functionality. It's all easy to use which is the main thing.

Much more important is how the new Honda Civic drives. In a motoring world populated by crossovers and SUVs that are boring to drive, the new Civic is a real treat.

The steering is accurate and has a lot of feel, the ride is excellent and the car's cornering ability prodigious.

For a family hatchback that is biased towards economy it's a hoot. The Type R version is going to be something else.

Prices start at £29,995 for the cheapest of the three trim levels available and rise to £32,995 for the top Advance trim that we've been driving.

Honda has certainly hit splendid form with the new Civic and I'd have it over a Golf and most other rivals.

Bank ‘to raise interest rates’ despite slight fall in inflation

THE Bank of England is forecast to raise interest rates again, despite signs that inflation eased last month.

Its Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) was to meet on Thursday but the summit was postponed to September 22, following the Queen's death.

Research consultancy Pantheon Macroeconomics believes the MPC will up the base rate by another 50 basis points, to 2.25 per cent. While other analysts think that at least one or two of the nine rate-setters will vote to increase the rate – which influences borrowing costs for households and businesses – by some 75 basis points.

The Bank is trying to cool inflation, which jumped to a 40-year high of 10.1 per cent in July. Some observers reckon data will reveal that inflation dipped last month.

Banking and wealth management group Investec is predicting the Office for National Statistics will confirm next Wednesday that the Consumer Prices Index of inflation eased to 9.8 per cent.

It had been expected that inflation would surge again because of previous plans that would have seen energy prices to soar in October.

By Graham Hiscott

The Government's two-year energy price freeze unveiled this week – a cap on the unit rate that will limit average bills to £2,500 a year – makes it less certain.

Experts also believe lifting the threat of an 80 per cent energy price jump for millions of consumers might mean they will not cut their spending as much, which in turn could boost the economy.

Samuel Tombs, chief UK economist at Pantheon, said: “A recession over the coming quarters no longer looks likely.”

The consultancy expects the economy to stay in the doldrums. It is forecasting gross domestic product will grow by just 0.2 per cent from the third to fourth quarter this year, then by only 0.1 per cent in the first and second quarters of 2023.

How the economy fared over the summer will be revealed in data for July published on Monday by the Office for National Statistics.

GAS: Energy price increase frozen

EU divided over Russian gas cap

EUROPEAN Union energy ministers were split yesterday over whether to cap Russian gas prices.

Talks were aimed at whittling down options, rather than reaching a final decision on ways to tackle a crisis fuelled by the war in Ukraine.

Jozef Sikela, Czech Industry

Minister, said: “We have to send a clear signal that we would do whatever it takes to support our households, our economies.”

Baltic states back a cap but central and eastern European states, many more reliant than others on Russian fuel, fear losing all their supplies.

Asos takes a hit in bills crisis

ONLINE fashion giant Asos warned profits would be at the bottom end of forecasts because squeezed customers are cutting back.

In a pre-close trading statement, the industry heavyweight reported good sales growth in June and July. But takings in August were “weaker than anticipated”. It added: “This reflected the impact of accelerating inflationary pressures on consumers and a slow start to autumn/winter shopping.”

Annual profits to August are set to be nearer £20million than the previous £60million upper guidance.

CASH BOOST FOR TROUBLED CINEWORLD

NOT THE FINAL REEL: The company's cinemas will remain open

MOVIE chain Cineworld said yesterday a US bankruptcy court had granted it access to up to £675million of £1.67billion of financial aid it had secured from existing lenders.

Cineworld Group filed for bankruptcy protection in America earlier this week, as the world's second-largest cinema chain operator struggled to rein in its massive debt.

The company said it expected to have sufficient liquidity to meet its obligations. The Chapter 11 filing involves Cineworld's US, UK and Jersey operations, covering the bulk of its business. The group, which has been struggling with debt amassed over the years, said its cinemas will continue to operate with staff and suppliers being paid.

VADENI is poised for a Group One hat-trick in the Irish Champion Stakes (3.45, nb) at Leopardstown.

The Jean-Claude Rouget trainee sluiced through the soft ground for a five-length score in the Prix du Jockey Club in June.

Tasked with taking the Coral-Eclipse, he made no mistake with a neck verdict from Mishriff.

Highly-regarded AUGUSTE RODIN

VADENI HAS CHAMPION CLASS

By The Scout

is expected to take another step up the ladder in the KPMG Champions Juvenile Stakes (2.40, nap).

Trainer Aidan O'Brien, right, has saddled eight of the 15 previous winners of the Group Two contest.

The first offspring of multiple Group One-winner Rhododendron is the choice of Ryan Moore - and that fills his backers with confidence.

Tomorrow, Al Basti Equiworld, Dubai Flying Five Stakes entrant MOONEISTA can send her rivals into orbit.

A couple of noteworthy efforts on soft ground from last summer put her firmly in the mix. On the wrong side when a Commonwealth Cup seventh, she had earlier travelled with zest when just behind A Case Of You. That rival is entitled to plenty of respect as the pair put it up to crack mare Highfield Princess.

GUIDE: LA PETITE COCO is blb and upwards ahead of these rivals on official figures and she will prove extremely hard to beat, despite having to concede weight all around. Although far from disgraced in the Yorkshire Oaks (Imf4, gd) last time, dropping back in trip should suit last as (gd) winner and her class can shine through. Above The Curve struck at the highest level at Longchamp (Imf2, gd-st) in May and she rates the biggest threat, ahead of Insinuendo, who has been touched off in Group 3 company the last twice.

GUIDE: English rider HIGHFIELD PRINCESS arrives here in the form of her life, having backed up her first Group 1 success at Deauville (6f, gd-st) in the Nunthorpe Stakes at York (5f, gd) last time, and another big performance is expected. The form of both of those races looks rock solid, beating subsequent Super Sprint winner Minzaal in France, and John Quinn's mare seemingly hasn't stopped improving yet. Mooneista has been running consistently well all season and she looks sure to give another good account, while last year's (gd) winner Romantic Proposal also warrants respect.

By The Scout

ALL the signposts point to NEW LONDON (3.55, nb) in the Cazoo St Leger at Doncaster tomorrow.

The race favourite was a smooth winner of the Gordon Stakes – and ticks the boxes on form and potential.

Strong at the finish, he hinted the extra two furlongs would be right up his street on Town Moor.

Placed horses Deauville Legend and the reopposing Hoo Ya Mal have both won since.

New London looks the ideal candidate to give Charlie Appleby and Will Buick back-to-back wins in the final Classic of the season.

A soggy start to the month is top of the charts for the supporters of TRUESHAN (2.45) in the Group Two Coral Flying Childers Stakes.

Trainer Alan King has played a waiting game this summer with his stable star, who was third to Kyprios in a pulsating battle of the stayers at Goodwood.

London calling

On ground faster than ideal, Trueshan loomed up to his key rivals but just lacked the extra impetus in the closing stages.

He is well clear on the ratings for his bid to land another big payday with Hollie Doyle.

TRILLIUM'S (1.35) potent turn of foot can thwart The Platinum Queen in the Group Two Coral Flying Childers Stakes.

Richard Hannon's juvenile powered to the front in the Molecomb, scoring with a bit in hand – and she looks ripe for the follow-up.

MAKANAH (2.10) didn't get the breaks at York and compensation awaits in the Coral Portland Handicap. The consistent sprinter is likely to sit off the pacesetters from stall 13, plotting a path to victory under Paul Hanagan.

Back on home shores, GARRUS can take the Group Two Cazoo Park Stakes (3.20).

The grey – unexposed at seven furlongs – was third behind Highfield Princess and Minzaal in the Group One Prix Maurice de Gheest at Deauville 35 days ago and that pair have struck at the highest level since.

GUIDE: Whenthedealindone has to be respected having won impressively at Ascot (5f, gd-st), last weekend, but a 10lb rise for that success will make his life tougher today. With that in mind, a chance can be taken with NOMADIC EMPIRE, who caught the eye in competitive contests at York (5f, gd) and Haydock (5f, gd-fm) in recent weeks. The consistent MakanaH is likely to be in the mix once again, while Bergerac and Dakota Gold also merit places on the shortlist.

GUIDE: It will take a mighty performance to beat TRUESHAN, who was far from disgraced in the Goodwood Cup (2m, gd) last time out. Alan King's star looks set to race under optimum conditions and can use this as a springboard towards the Long Distance Cup at Ascot next month. Coltrane has been progressive this year and he is the most likely danger, while Get Shirty, who finished a good fifth in the Ebor (1m6f, gd-fm), could reward each-way players.

GUIDE: Back to winning ways with an impressive display at York (7f, gd-fm), KINROSS can overcome a 3lb penalty here and notch up a fourth Group-level success of his career. Ralph Beckett's charge gets the vote ahead of Garrus, who brings eye-catching form to the table, having finished just behind subsequent Group 1 winners Highfield Princess and Minzaal in the Prix Maurice de Gheest (7f, gd-st). Sacred is surely better than what she has shown so far this season and the filly could be the type to bounce back along with last year's Challenge Stakes (7f, gd-st) winner Al Suhail.

GUIDE: Having landed this with Hurricane Lane 12 months ago, Godolphin appear to hold all the aces once again as NEW LONDON makes his bid for Group 1 glory. A decisive winner of the Gordon Stakes (1m4f, gd-fm) last time out, the son of Dubawi looks set to be suited by the step up in trip, and could be tough on beat. Eldar Eldarov was far from disgraced in the Grand Prix du Paris at Longchamp (1m4f, gd-st) in July and is respected, along with this year's Derby runner-up Hoo Ya Mal. Haskoy left it late to get up in the Gallies at York (1m4f, gd), and though this requires more she shouldn't be underestimated.

Smith's Hull double

FORMER Hull KR boss Tony Smith is out to “restore pride” in troubled Hull FC.

Brett Hodgson was axed by Hull on Monday after another dismal campaign and his fellow Aussie has quickly been installed.

Smith, who also coached Warrington, Leeds and England, helped Hull KR to a maiden Super League semi-final last season, although he was sacked in July.

But he said of his move to their city rivals: “It’s a great opportunity, one I was not expecting so soon.

“The overwhelming feeling is excitement about restoring pride in the club and taking us to greater heights.

“I’ve had an association with the club through my family and, having lived in the city, I’ve got a great understanding of how big the club is and how much passion there is for the club to be successful.”

From Neil McLeman in New York

JOE SALISBURY revealed he restrained his celebrations out of respect for the Queen after retaining the US Open men's doubles title and the world No.1 spot.

The Londoner and his American partner Rajeew Ram beat Neal Skupski and Dutchman Wesley Koolhof 7-6 7-5 in a tight final last night.

The victory means the duo are the first pair to defend the title here since 1996 – and Salisbury remains world No.1. Liverpool's Skupski would have topped the rankings for the first time if he had won his first Grand Slam title.

But with the UK in mourning, Salisbury wore a black armband and Skupski a black ribbon on his shirt.

“I think we felt like we should just show a sign of respect and just an acknowledgement of the situation because it's a huge moment in our history,” said Salisbury. “We felt we wanted to show a sign of respect for that.”

And after the victory, the world No.1 admitted: “It's definitely felt a little bit strange. I think everyone wasn't quite sure how to act.

“I think it didn't feel appropriate to be overly celebrating or at least showing that too much, because obviously everybody back home and around the world is in mourning at the moment, and it's a very sad time. Obviously we are very happy with the success that we have had, but, yeah, it's a sad time at the same moment.”

Defeated Skupski said: “It is a bit strange playing when the country is in mourning. She was a great servant and we will remember she was an incredible woman.”

The Australian legends Todd Woodbridge and Mark Woodforde were the last pair to defend this title in 1996.

Salisbury, who has also won two mixed doubles titles as well as three Grand Slam doubles with Ram, is now only two behind the Open record of seven Major titles held by Jamie Murray and Virginia Wade.

“I'm very proud of that,” said Salisbury, who shares £594,000 prize-money with Ram. “I think we have always said these are the ones we want to win. We focus our preparation and everything throughout the year on winning the Grand Slams.

“It feels so special to have won this again. I haven't really thought about the record too much. Yeah, I guess I did know that it was seven.

“We are just going to keep focused on the next one and winning as many as we can. Obviously if at some point I can get there, that would be amazing.”

The fifth seed, right, was delighted more people watched her quarter-final on Tunisian TV than saw Messi's Paris Saint-Germain take silenced. British team McLaren have a black ribbon on their machines, and have faded out their orange speedmark.

Verstappen finished 0.143 seconds behind Sainz. Russell and Hamilton finished fifth and seventh respectively.

RICHARD WIGGLESWORTH starts a season which ends with his 40th birthday vowing to improve both as a player and coach.

Premiership Rugby's all-time leading appearance-maker played a starring role as Leicester won last season's Grand Final against Saracens.

Three months on, the Peter Pan of the English game is in line for his 319th league outing as Steve Borthwick's Tigers open their title defence today at Exeter.

With England stars Ben Youngs, below, and Jack van Poortvliet also vying for scrum-half selection, Wigglesworth has his work cut out to extend his 20-year playing career.

But the Blackpool-born player-coach has spent his rugby life driving standards and is not about to stop now.

Wigglesworth said: "The way Steve operates there is no place for you at Leicester if you don't want to try and get better every day.

"I haven't seen any change since winning the final. We all know what is expected. We're on red alert. We've turned up again and got stuck in."

Leicester made history last season as the first club to lead the league after every round of games.

They won their first 15 matches in the Premiership and Europe, were unbeaten until mid-January and went on to beat Saracens at Twickenham.

Following that is going to take some effort, given they have lost Ellis Genge and George Ford and start the campaign with their five current England stars unavailable.

They have recruited well but of their three headline signings only Jimmy Gopperth plays at Sandy Park. Handre Pollard and Anthony Watson are injured.

The Queen's passing caused the opening night of the Premiership to be postponed and means Leicester take centre stage today.

It is no less than they deserve but Wigglesworth knows they must quickly move on from their title win or fall behind.

He said: "You can either look back and think, 'That was great' or go, 'How much work did that take, how tough was that?' then raise the bar again."

Wigglesworth has done that throughout a career that has brought seven Premiership titles and 33 England caps. He said:

"People give me the Peter Pan tag and I like to think that is a compliment. I've played until I'm nearly 40 and still have as much ambition and enthusiasm as ever.

"I can't say the last final didn't mean a lot to me, playing against my old Saracens team-mates, a club that hadn't lost a final since 2014.

"But it's amazing how quickly you move on. Five weeks later, we are back to trying to get better. I wouldn't want it any other way."

WE WILL FIGHT ON SAYS NEILD

CAMERON NEILD insists physical rather than financial survival will be on Worcester's minds when he captains English rugby's crisis club today.

Warriors play at London Irish unsure what even next week holds after being hit by a winding-up petition by HMRC over unpaid tax and LONDON IRISH V WORCESTER 3PM having their accounts frozen. Neild said: "When you cross the white line, you aren't thinking about what's coming into your bank at the end of the month.

"You're thinking about the guy that's coming head-first into you and how you can put him back on his ae." The Warriors have been urged to use the game as a job application in case the situation at Sixways is not resolved. Former England forward Matt Kvesic said: "It has been pretty stressful - but we are not going to just go there, roll over and have our bellies tickled."

Boehly backs Potter for the long haul

GRAHAM POTTER will not be sacked if Chelsea fail to make the top four.

Blues owner Todd Boehly is determined to bring success to the club - but missing out on the Champions League will not be a deal breaker for the new manager.

That is a huge departure from the Roman Abramovich era as the former Chelsea owner gained a reputation for axing managers as soon as it became clear they were struggling to reach the top four. That is still the minimum aim for Potter this season, but it will not make or break him as Chelsea boss.

The new hierarchy have indicated they see Potter as a long-term appointment, having given him a five-year deal worth more than £50million. They believe that he can build a squad, improve and develop young players and enjoy sustained success both in the Premier League and in Europe as well as domestic competitions.

They are determined to move away from the 'hire and fire' culture of Abramovich and, despite sacking Thomas Tuchel just 100 days after taking over, Boehly and fellow owner Behdad Eghbali have reassured Potter that he will be given time and support.

Jose Mourinho, Luiz Felipe Scolari and Andre Villas-Boas were all sacked as soon as it became clear that they may not reach the Champions League and 14 different bosses served during Abramovich's 19 years at Stamford Bridge.

DONNY UP-BEEK

DONNY van de Beek has welcomed the competition in Manchester United's midfield - despite admitting it has made his life harder.

The acquisition of £70million anchor Casemiro and Denmark playmaker Christian Eriksen has increased midfield options for manager Erik ten Hag.

"We have new top-class players so that will help the team to improve," Van de Beek said. "Everyone wants to play, but you have to improve yourself every day to be in the XI.

"A club like United needs many options and a big squad to have a good season. Having lots of options keeps everyone sharp."

Lewis: She was a symbol of hope

SIR Lewis Hamilton has paid tribute to the Queen as a “symbol of hope” and “truly like no other”.

The seven-time Formula One world champion was knighted for services to motorsports in the 2021 New Year’s Honours List.

In a post on Instagram, Hamilton wrote: “How do you find the words to describe the loss of Her Majesty The Queen? She was truly an iconic leader, an inspiration and a reassuring presence for most, if not all, of our lives.

“Since the sad news yesterday, I’ve been reflecting on her incredible life.

She was a symbol of hope for so many and she served her country with dignity, dedication and kindness. She was truly like no other and I’m grateful to have lived during her time. Her legacy will be long-lasting and her passing deeply felt.”

Hamilton received an MBE, below, following his maiden world title win in 2008.

Reflecting on his investitures, he said: “I had the incredible honour of being able to spend time with her. It is something I’ll never forget.

“We talked about our shared love of dogs and she was incredibly generous with her time.

“I know the whole nation and many others around the world will be mourning her loss and my thoughts and prayers are with her family and all those close to her.”

Fox: You couldn’t have anyone nicer

RUGBY league legend Neil Fox MBE recalled his pride at meeting the Queen and being honoured by her.

Queen Elizabeth II was the RFL’s patron until 2016 and twice attended the Challenge Cup final at Wembley.

The first time was in 1960 when Fox was in a Wakefield Trinity side that inflicted a record-breaking 38-5 win against Hull.

The centre, below, who remains rugby league’s most prolific scorer with 6,220 points, scored two tries and seven goals in the victory.

His 20 points on the day remains a joint-record for the Challenge Cup final.

Former Great Britain star Fox, 83, said: “The first time I went down to Wembley with Wakefield in 1960 she presented the cup to us. Obviously, that was a great day and a real honour. But the Queen also presented me with the MBE. I’ll never forget what she said to me at the time. She said, ‘Well done’, and then added, ‘You’re not the one who...’

“And I said, ‘No, Ma’am, that was my brother.’ You couldn’t have anyone nicer. She was so generous with her time.”

In that instance, the Queen was referring to the iconic 1968 final. Don Fox famously missed a simple conversion from in front of the posts in the final seconds that would have given Wakefield victory against Leeds.

The devastated prop, who had already earned man of the match, slumped to the turf as Leeds celebrated around him.

How joker had a laugh with monarch as Gunners were treated to tea at the Palace

ARSENAL were the first and only football club to ever be invited to Buckingham Palace for afternoon tea with the Queen.

And a former Arsenal star has shared his memory of their 2007 invitation.

Her Majesty was due to cut the ribbon to mark the opening of the club’s newly-constructed Emirates Stadium after their move from Highbury in 2006 but was unable to attend after hurting her back.

The Queen, disappointed at missing the event with Prince Philip stepping in, decided to make up for it by inviting Arsene Wenger’s side for a royal meeting in February 2007.

Ivory Coast full-back Emmanuel Eboué, who played at Arsenal from 2004-2011, recalled his memories of making Her Majesty laugh.

“We went there and Thierry Henry said to me, ‘Please, Emmanuel, it’s the Queen’s house, don’t do anything’.”

Despite the warning to be on his best behaviour beforehand from the club captain, Eboué – a notorious dressing-room joker – narrated a story that left both the Queen and the late Duke of Edinburgh in fits of laughter at the time.

It concerned an outrageous request from Eboué to look after the Queen’s corgis.

He recalled: “No problem,” I said (to Henry), ‘Don’t worry’. So the Queen came in and went along shaking each player’s hand.

‘After she had finished, I saw all her corgis so I said, ‘Ma’am, Ma’am’. She turned back and asked, ‘How are you?’. I said, ‘Ma’am, I am OK thank you, but please, I don’t want to be a footballer any more, I want to look after your dogs. I want to take them for walks, wash them, feed them. I want to be a dog carer’.

By Darren Witcoop

“The Queen, honestly, she was laughing. Prince Philip was laughing too. All the team were laughing!”

Dressed immaculately at the front of the coach, Wenger took in his surroundings and pointed out: “It’s quite big. You could play a big football match in here.”

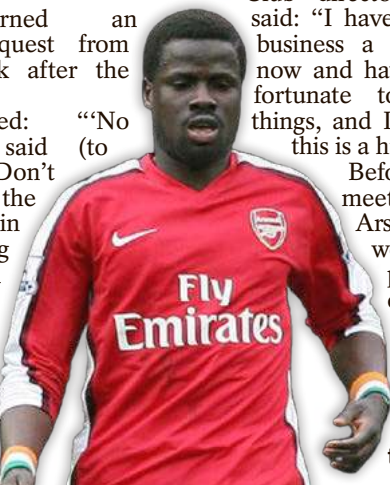

The video also shows the likes of Wenger and Henry leading the party at the Queen’s private residence, before Arsenal’s record goalscorer introduced each player individually to the monarch to shake her hand.

Wenger added: “I think she is interested in people and will make them feel relaxed.”

Club director Ken Friar said: “I have been in the business a year or two now and have been very fortunate to do many things, and I would think this is a highlight.”

Before the meeting, the Arsenal squad were given a private tour of the state apartments

FUN DAY: Eboué could not resist joking with the Queen

WHAT AN HONOUR Captain Henry introduces the Queen to the squad and she meets Wenger, right by Desmond Shawe-Taylor, a royal collections expert.

Arsenal’s multi-cultural group of stars nervously awaited the Queen inside the palace with a cup of tea.

But as she was being introduced to players such as Gilberto Silva and Denilson, a classic Nokia mobile phone ringtone went off.

Henry introduced the squad and the Frenchman said afterwards: “It went really nicely. I have no words to describe the experience the Queen has given us.” At the end of the visit, the Gunners decided to give Her Majesty a miniature statue of the club emblem – a cannon.

Wenger offered a cheeky jibe, saying: “This is not to incite you to start a war”, which the Queen luckily saw the funny side of.

And she was even given a parting recommendation by Henry about visiting club physio Gary Lewin, who later went on to serve the England national team.

Six corgis came in followed by the Queen

SIR NICK FALDO won six Majors and was knighted by the Queen in 2009 – the only British golfer in the modern era to receive such an honour.

Many years earlier, the Ryder Cup legend was invited to a private lunch.

Faldo, 65, left, said: “I remember when I was awarded an MBE – not bad for a kid from Welwyn Garden City and a council house as well.

“I was summoned back to Buckingham Palace for lunch with the Queen, which the butler had informed me had been done for the first time in 25 years.

“I felt very honoured indeed. There had been a major panic in the house that morning, so major I have no recollection of the reasons for the ensuing madcap dash to the Palace where I arrived tie-less and jacket-less.

“There were a few of us present from all walks of life, we were being served champagne when I heard a scratching noise on the wooden floor outside and six corgis crashed in followed by Her Majesty the Queen.

“At lunch I sat beside the governor of Holloway Women’s Prison.

“I’m a golfer,” I said.

RONALDO PAYS RESPECTS

CRISTIANO RONALDO has posted an emotional tribute to the Queen.

The Manchester United forward, right, spoke of the "everlasting love" the people of the United Kingdom had for Queen Elizabeth II and said she was "irreplaceable".

Portuguese icon Ronaldo said: "Seven years of my career were played in the Premier League, making this my eighth season living in England. Throughout these years, I've felt the everlasting love of the UK for its Queen and how important Her Majesty was and will forever be to the British people.

"I pay my respect to her memory and I mourn this irreplaceable lost [loss] with the country that I've learnt to call home.

"My thoughts and prayers are with the Royal Family."

I was the most nervous I have ever been

FITZROY SIMPSON was a key member of Jamaica's football team that reached their only World Cup at France 98.

He was later invited to Buckingham Palace in October for a reception for the English-based players.

Former Manchester City midfielder Simpson, left, was among the stars hosted by the Queen and Prince Philip.

He has the invitation framed at home and the 52-year-old said: "It was one of the proudest moments of my life, a humble boy from Wiltshire.

"I played in plenty of big games but going to meet her, I was the most nervous I've ever been.

"We ran through protocol first and it was only if Her Majesty offers her hand that you offered yours. I recall we were in this big room, the doors opened and Her Majesty was there.

"It was surreal - I am sure the Queen has realised before that it is quite intimidating, Her Majesty in her home.

"I had my hands by my side until the Queen offered her hand. Her Majesty stopped and spoke to me and said: 'Congratulations, you have done yourselves proud'.

"Her Majesty also asked, 'What part of England do you live in?'

"I said: 'Swindon, Ma'am'.

"The Queen said, 'Oh the Motorola building - what a monstrosity'. I thought, 'I know, I live three miles from it, it is a monstrosity'."

JAMES NURSEY

Day Her Majesty winked at Foster

SIR BRENDAN Foster first met the Queen half a century ago when she presented him with his bronze medal at the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh.

"I remember watching the film of the race afterwards, where she was getting really excited," recalled the British former long-distance runner, below.

"We all know she enjoyed horses but she also enjoyed watching people run."

Their paths would cross a few times after that, most memorably when Her Majesty opened the leisure centre in Gateshead when Foster was recreation director.

"My job was to host her for an hour and a half, showing her round all the new facilities," he said.

"It was all going so well until the finish when she had to sign something. The civic pen was laid out in front of her and I breathed a sigh of relief - only the pen didn't work.

"She looked at me and smiled, then went to her handbag. I'm not sure there was a marmalade sandwich in there, but there was a pen - and she produced it and signed the document.

"She must have seen my relieved face but didn't say anything. A couple of minutes later, out in the corridor, just the two of us, she turned to me and winked."

I heard she would be there...so I won

VIRGINIA WADE has paid tribute to the Queen for helping her fulfil her destiny at Wimbledon.

In one of the All England Club's most iconic moments, Her Majesty - marking her Silver Jubilee - presented the then 31-year-old with the trophy in 1977 on one of only four visits she made to SW10.

Wade, pictured with the Queen below, had lifted the US Open title in 1968 and the Australian Open crown in 1972. But the darling of the British crowds had never gone beyond the semi-final stages at her home Grand Slam.

Wade, now 77 but the last British woman to win the title, said: "They closed entries about six weeks before.

"I was thinking, 'I have never fulfilled my potential at Wimbledon and I am running out of time here'.

"Then I heard the Queen was coming and said to myself, 'I'm going to be there - it might be my one and only chance and I'm going to win'. So, I had this destiny in a way.

"It was a motivation because everybody gets nervous at the big events so determination has to override the trepidation.

"Tennis was not her favourite sport and it was an honour for her to be there."

tomorrow, leaving football as the main sport not to return.

The Government left the decision on whether to postpone to the various sporting bodies, with the Premier League, EFL and FA feeling it was right to call off this weekend's football, even at grassroots level.

The Queen was FA Patron while Prince William is President and the governing body said in a statement: "As a mark of respect to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, English football has united to postpone all fixtures this weekend."

Former Liverpool and England striker Peter Crouch, below, felt it would have been better to play on.

He said: "I know it's only a game, and some things are much bigger, but imagine if all our games went ahead this weekend."

"Black armbands, silences observed, national anthem, royal band playing to the millions around the world watching. Isn't that a better send off?"

The Football Supporters' Association agreed with Crouch, calling it "a missed opportunity".

Next weekend's games may also be postponed because many police officers will be needed in London for the Queen's state funeral on September 19.

The third Test at The Oval between England and South Africa resumes today as will the BMW PGA Championship, which will now be played over 54 holes at Wentworth, rather than 72.

The opening fixtures of rugby union's Premiership will take place across the weekend after last night's scheduled matches were postponed, while the Super League play-off between Huddersfield and Salford goes ahead today.

The Queen's favourite sport, horse racing, returns tomorrow with the St Leger being staged at Doncaster 24 hours later than scheduled.

The Great North Run also takes place tomorrow, but cycling's Tour of Britain has been abandoned three stages early, with Spain's Gonzalo Serrano declared the winner.

The Davis Cup Group D tennis in Glasgow next week will go ahead.

Great Britain, the USA, Kazakhstan and Holland will play each other between September 13-18.

It passed quickly but I will never forget meeting the Queen, I was walking on air

EXCLUSIVE

By Dean Wilson

LORD BOTHAM has led the cricketing tributes to a "remarkable woman" as the sport remembered the Queen.

'Beefy' was one of a number of former England captains to have spent time with the Queen during one of her 26 visits to Lord's to meet the teams, as the only woman allowed into the pavilion during a match until 1999.

It was his good fortune that she attended his debut against Australia at Trent Bridge in 1977 before he took on captaincy duties in the 1981 Ashes, where he introduced the England side to the Queen at Lord's.

Her Majesty was also at the Centenary Test in Melbourne in 1977, and handed out numerous honours to players from across the world, once travelling to Barbados to knight Sir Garfield Sobers in 1975.

Beefy received the same honour from the Queen in 2007 for his services to charity and cricket, and the life peer said she showed great interest in the charity work that raised millions of pounds through his walks for leukaemia.

"It was a very sad day on Thursday to learn of the Queen's passing," said Lord Botham. "We had a wine-tasting event and it just knocked the stuffing out of everyone."

"She was a remarkable woman and one of the two most fantastic people I've ever met, the other being Nelson Mandela."

"Both of them are the very finest examples of human beings there have been and I'm so grateful to have had the chance to meet them."

"The Queen spoke to me for quite some time during my investiture and it was mainly about the charity work – it was a very special day."

"Any time you met the Queen was a special moment and I was lucky enough that I first met her on my debut which made everything that extra bit special."

"It was a moment that passed by very quickly but one I will never forget – I was walking on air after that."

In 1977, Mike Brearley was captain and doing the introductions in Nottingham.

And he recalls just how at ease the Queen made him feel, allaying any fear that he might get something wrong.

"There is a feeling that you might forget the name of your best friend in a formal situation with whom someone feels a little bit in awe," said Brearley.

of the players were excited by the opportunity to meet her, although when I once described it as my fortune to introduce her to the players, I was reminded in a letter from [cricket writer] EW Swanton that, 'Surely Michael, even in this day and age it was the players who were introduced to Her Majesty'. Of course he was right." It was in Melbourne where Australia star Dennis Lillee famously asked the Queen for her autograph when she met the teams, which was not provided at the time but was sent to him later.

And former England captain David Gower also remembers meeting Her Majesty overseas much to her surprise but, as on other occasions, her natural warmth shone through.

"I arrived in Barbados and at the airport was told that I had been invited to a dinner aboard the Royal yacht Britannia with the Queen and Prince Philip," said Gower.

"I had no idea they were visiting at the same time, so I hastily arranged the appropriate evening wear and joined the great and the good of Barbados on board the ship.

"When Her Majesty got to me, she said, 'Oh, hello. What are you doing here?'."

"I reassured her I had been invited but it was also nice to be recognised having met her on a few previous occasions.

"I can also remember a game against the South Africans for the Earl of Carnarvon XI in 1994 at Highclere, when the Queen was sat in a marquee watching the game and I was invited to join her.

"I had on a new pair of Bolle sunglasses that she was quite taken with and curious about, and asked to try them on.

"I said, 'Of course, ma'am', and gave them to her.

"She enjoyed trying them out and she did give them back, so we shared the sunglasses that day.

"What she has done throughout her life of service to the country has been magnificent and it is a sad time now that she is no longer with us."

other cricket, including the women's T20 against India, would continue from today onwards.

The England captain had made his feelings plain when he responded on social media to the question as to whether elite sport would be cancelled over the weekend in respect to the Monarch's passing.

And he and his team-mates will get to honour the Queen, with the Test continuing as scheduled with three days remaining.

It means the teams and the toss stands as it did on Thursday, with the first day recorded as a washout and day two cancelled.

The ECB did try to extend the game by a day to allow for a four-day match but the logistical complications could not be overcome.

South Africa are scheduled to depart on Tuesday for home with only a small window of a few days before their next tour to India and Australia.

There was also the departure of the England T20 side to Pakistan on Wednesday to consider, even though only Harry Brook is taking a playing part.

In a statement, the ECB said: "Cricket will resume on Saturday to pay tribute to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and honour her remarkable life and service.

"The decision has been taken after consultation with DCMS and in line with Official National Mourning guidance."

A total cancellation of the Test was set to cost the ECB and Surrey about £4million in lost revenue.

THE NATIONAL TELEVISION AWARDS Thursday, 8pm, ITV

It's the glitziest night in the television calendar, and Joel Dommett is back to present the National Television Awards for a second time.

The 37-year-old took the helm of the show last year and, after impressing viewers, teases he will "push the boat out a little bit more" as he celebrates the biggest and best moments from the small screen.

Here, we catch up with the Masked Singer and Masked Dancer host to find out more...

Hi, Joel! Are you excited to be back hosting the NTAs?

I am very excited! It's the wildest night of the year in TV so it's great to be hosting it. It's like the office party of our industry so it's great to be in the room with all of the people who are nominated. I can't believe I get to host it – it's a dream come true... or a nightmare.

Now that it's your second year, do you feel a bit more relaxed? Can you be a bit cheekier?

Yeah, I can put a few extra details in and push the boat out a little bit more, but I don't want to rock it too much. People love the NTAs, it feels warm and cuddly when it's on TV. It's almost nostalgic seeing Ant and Dec going and picking up their award. I'm not here to do anything particularly different with it, I'm just here to put my spin on it and keep it as brilliant as it always has been.

Is there a show or actor who you think deserves more attention but maybe hasn't been shortlisted?

Love Island was so huge that it feels really odd that it's not there. This series was so strong, so maybe it'll be back there next year. I'm really excited for entertainment over the next few months though, with the Big Brother reboot and I'm A Celebrity... All Stars.

What has been your TV highlight of the past 12 months?

I'm going to be biased and say The Masked Singer. It was absolutely incredible! Natalie Imbruglia, who knew? It's such a highlight for me because I got to host it.

We're talking about...

TV's biggest awards night

A piece of cake

The Great British Bake Off is back and, according to presenters Prue Leith and Paul Hollywood, it's tastier than ever!

Whisk at the ready, it's time for our favourite annual, sugar-filled cooking show – yep, Bake Off is back!

This year, judges Prue Leith and Paul Hollywood return to the tent with their keen taste buds ready to put the bakers through the ultimate test.

Hosts Noel Fielding and Matt Lucas also return to give the bakers – and us – a bit of light relief.

So, was it all fairy cakes and fun this year? Or were the bakers left agonising over their soggy bottoms? Here, Paul and Prue tell us what we can expect...

So, what can you tell us about the new series?

Prue: I thought it would be a hard act to follow because the previous one with Giuseppe and Jürgen was just so magical, but these guys turned out to be great. They were generally a younger bunch, they bonded really well, enjoyed themselves and were very creative.

What really stood out?

Prue: I love the way cakes are decorated. It's been happening gradually, but there's been a leap forward. I think it may have happened during lockdown.

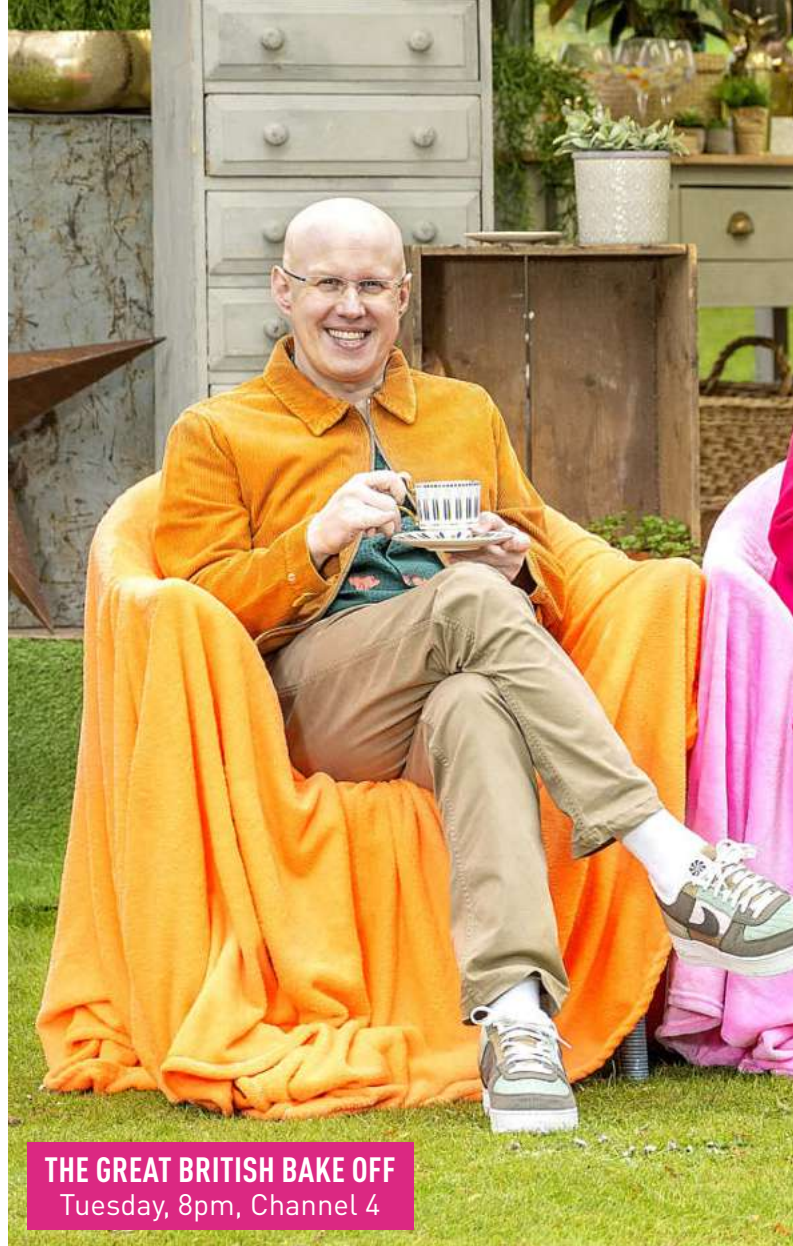

When I first came on the series, seven years ago, there'd be lots of rosettes around the edge of a cake with perhaps a strawberry between each rosette. Now, they do all these wonderfully modern designs with lots of mirror glazes, lots of informal piping, lots of decoration with fresh flowers. That impressed me.

Paul: The standard was very high. They had great ideas. They executed them well and were all very professional. But they all struggled with their timing. Bad timing catches most bakers out when they come into the tent, and it ran away from them all because they were trying to impress us by being so inventive. Plus, when you've got Prue, myself, Noel and Matt all coming over to have a chat, it's easy to take your eye off the ball a bit.

“We had Custard Week – who doesn't like custard?”

THE GREAT BRITISH BAKE OFF
Tuesday, 8pm, Channel 4

Did anything unusual happen during the series?

Prue: We had some unusual combinations – we had pineapple and popcorn on one cake. Oh, and some quite rich chilli and chocolate-type flavours. It was really good. Mexican Week upped the chilli content. Paul likes a bit more chilli than I do, having spent so much time in Mexico. He can stand a bit more heat than I can.

Paul: Mexican Week and Halloween Week were fantastic. When the tent was set up for Halloween with cobwebs it was all quite spooky... Noel thought it was like going home. The food I had in Mexico was spectacular and it was lovely to carry it into the tent.

Did you have any Tequila?

Prue: I got a glass, yes. We had Custard Week, too. We had all sorts of custards. There were things like floating islands and cakes where Crème Pâtissière was very dominant. Who doesn't like custard?

How much fun is it working with Matt and Noel?

Prue: We have a lot of laughs. It's different with those two than with Sandi [Toksvig]. We were more of a pair. Those boys talk football and motor cars all day while Sandi and I would talk books or theatre.

Paul: When Matt and Noel do something that makes me laugh, Prue's normally oblivious which makes it funnier. Matt, Noel and I end up giggling like school kids, which I love.

Prue, if Paul was a bake what would he be?

A doughnut. Hard on the outside but squishy in the middle.

Paul, what would Prue be?

An éclair – very elegant on the outside, beautiful to look at and soft.

Do you guys ever disagree?

Prue: Sometimes Paul teases me and I don't get the joke because I'm not always good at getting jokes, but we don't have cross words. Let's say I'll think the cake is perfectly baked and Paul thinks it's slightly dry. We've never disagreed on Star Baker or who has to go home.

What's your favourite thing to bake at the moment?

Prue: Lemon polenta cake. I sometimes do it with orange instead. I made a brilliant one this summer with the same basic recipe of ground almonds and polenta – there's no gluten – and eggs. It had a pomegranate and rhubarb topping. Delicious!

Paul: I've had to rejuvenate my sourdough starter because I've been away working so much. I've been feeding my 'mother', getting it ready for me finishing work and making proper sourdough. Our pick of the best to watch – don't miss out Jeremy Clarkson, Richard Hammond and James May have been unleashed internationally again as they head for the snowy wastes of the Arctic Circle.

The team travel from Norway to the Russian border on their latest adventure. But the icy escapades took a serious turn when James was hospitalised after crashing in a tunnel early into filming. "It was a stark reminder that while we're doing this for TV, it doesn't mean it can't go wrong," says Richard – who was almost killed in a smash while filming Top Gear in 2006. "I think it was a shock for everyone – mainly because it wasn't me!"

The Proms is the world's biggest classical music festival, so of course it demands a big finale. As well as familiar anthems and arias, we'll hear a new work from fast-rising British composer James B Wilson.

Dalia Stasevska conducts as she is joined by star cellist and former BBC Young Musician Sheku Kanneh-Mason and Norwegian soprano Lise Davidsen.

But as always, they'll save the best until last – so grab your flags and get ready. "Land of hope and glory..."

This new comedy series is written by and stars This Country's Daisy May Cooper and her real-life friend Selin Hizli, of Grantchester fame.

Daisy plays Nic, whose life is brightened when Jen arrives in town and their sons become friends. But after Jen confides in Nic, dark secrets start to bubble up. "They have this sort of teen romance where they feel they connect," says Selin.

Daisy adds, "But like a lot of friendships, it turns toxic. We've had a lot of toxic friendships – I think mainly because we are the toxic ones."

On the other side of the Square, Sharon is busily applying her lip gloss and preparing to breathily reveal to Phil that he's marrying the wrong woman.

PROFESSOR T
Friday, 9pm, ITV

In the mood for crime

Ben Miller returns as the brilliant Cambridge criminologist with OCD in a new series of Professor T

Cambridge criminology lecturer Jasper Tempest is back helping police in a second series of crime drama Professor T. Based on the hit Belgian series of the same name, the show stars comedian and actor Ben Miller, 56, as the criminologist who suffers from obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD). It also features Rising Damp star Frances de la Tour as Jasper's mother, Adelaide.

More family secrets are revealed in this series as Jasper goes into therapy. Here, Ben tells us more about what to expect and how his own experience of OCD has helped him play the character...

What appeals to you most about this role?

I love the mix of really moving stuff and the very light and funny stuff. But the biggest kick I get out of it is, as somebody who's had OCD, the professor is so unashamed and unreserved about his own problems. I find that really liberating. He just doesn't care who knows. He's sort of out and proud about his own shortcomings and I find that is a joy to play.

Does having OCD yourself help you play the professor?

He's a very cathartic character to play who is releasing a lot of stuff that's inside me. Often what will happen in the show is I get really emotional in a scene, and the director has to remind me that Professor T is somebody who holds his emotions inside.

Are you happy how OCD is portrayed in Professor T?

I feel that playing characters truthfully can only help. I think what's at the heart of OCD is it's a way of managing anxiety, it's a coping mechanism for the problems that arise. For me, it got to a point where it didn't really work anymore and the behaviours I was having to go through were just very embarrassing for me and for other people. Professor T isn't a campaigning show but, hopefully, we are honing in clear memories of holding a shotgun, pointing at his father and seeing his father dead. In this series, he starts to deal with that and he finds he just can't keep that bottled up anymore.

The professor has a lot on his mind

How did you find working with Juliet Stevenson, who plays his therapist?

I was very nervous. I never got over that it was Juliet Stevenson, and that feeling is never gonna go really, because I've seen her in so many wonderful films and TV shows. One of the things I was expecting from Juliet was that she'd be brilliant in the dramatic scenes. What I hadn't expected was she'd be so funny and she'd be able to do the light, funny things as well and as beautifully as she did.

Have the professor and DI Poole, your Death In Paradise character, anything in common?

There's a lot of common ground, I think, but the biggest difference in terms of playing them is that Richard Poole solves crimes as they go along. Professor T almost always solves the crime within the first 30 seconds of the episode. He pretty much always immediately knows who's done it and it is very interesting because then it becomes about him. There are two mysteries on the show. One mystery is who is murdered that week and the other is who is Professor T? I love both shows for completely different reasons.

What's it like working with Billy, who plays Adelaide's chihuahua, Kafka?

He is a professional. Billy's wonderful. He's a very smart dog. His range as an actor is absolutely extraordinary, and what's funny about him is he is very starry. He has all these funny little coats and things he wears when he is not in shot. His lovely trainer will bring out something she's knitted for him. So he'll suddenly be in knitwear or wearing tweed. He's a bit of a diva.

Ben as Professor T and Frances de la Tour as Adelaide

EMMA NAOMI AS DC LISA DONCKERS

Professor T's protégé chose her career over her love life in the first series, but there is the possibility she may try and rekindle her relationship with police partner Dan Winters (Barney White) in the new season.

"They're still a good team and there's clearly chemistry there," Emma says of the relationship. "They get to know each other better and let each other in a little more. But the question remains – will they make it?"

FRANCES DE LA TOUR AS ADELAIDE TEMPEST

While a lot has already been revealed about Jasper's relationship with his overbearing mother, more family secrets and lies about his troubled childhood are sure to be uncovered in the new season, which sees both Jasper and Adelaide heading into therapy.

"She's in a complete state about it," reveals Frances. "She obviously fears that [therapy] would disturb him – there may be something even more horrendous that has happened, that we have yet to find out."

'A lot more people are here for help now'

With the rising cost of living causing many to struggle, Lidl is supporting the charities who are helping the vulnerable

The staff of the LifeHouse centre in Portsmouth would love to help everyone who needs it, but they know it isn't possible. "There's a lot of vulnerable people out there," says manager Mike Morell.

What the charity does is still impressive, giving out 500 food parcels a month, with around 25 a week being delivered to vulnerable people who cannot make it into the building. It also offers a full cooked breakfast on Wednesdays and an evening meal on Thursdays.

The centre is open three days a week and also provides rooms for meetings, free Wi-Fi to help with job applications or benefits, a range of donated clothes and household items and visits from hairdressers and footcare specialists.

Meanwhile, the cost of living is rising sharply. "We have a lot more people coming to the door for food parcels now," says Mike. "They're starting to queue outside in the morning. When benefits are paid monthly people start to run out of money around week three or four."

To meet this growing demand, LifeHouse has looked to businesses for support and donations. "Lidl has been great," says Mike. "It has the donation boxes at the front of the supermarket, but it's also very good at giving us things from the back, like multipacks that have been split up, or mislabelled produce."

The supermarket chain is working with Neighbourly, a platform that connects local businesses with charities in their area. A fund of £500,000 has been set up by Lidl, which is accessible to the network of charities that currently collect food from Lidl GB stores to give to those in need.

And thanks to a grant from Lidl, LifeHouse has been able to get a new door for its centre. "The old one had been boarded over – it was basically just a sheet of wood," says Mike. The new door is much more secure and it is also wider, which improves accessibility for users in wheelchairs or with prams.

The grant awarded by Lidl means LifeHouse and other charities like it can continue to give support to the people who need it. And Lidl shoppers can know they are spending their money with a retailer who cares about their community.

FROZEN PLANET II
Sunday, 8pm, BBC One

Earth's chilly secrets are laid bare by Sir David Attenborough

Zero hour

Coming 11 years after the first Frozen Planet gave us a glimpse of polar life, this six-part sequel revisits the Arctic regions and explores other remote, cold parts of the Earth, from icy deserts and mountains to frozen oceans.

Narrated by Sir David Attenborough and filmed over four years, the latest camera technology captures nature's spectacular and intimate moments and shows how rising temperatures are threatening icy landscapes. The team flew high-speed, first-person view "racer" drones to down mountains for dramatic, never-before-seen images of avalanches in motion.

Elsewhere, hidden remote-camera traps snap shy and secretive animals, such as wild giant pandas, as they roam the snowy forests in search of food.

Time-lapse cameras placed on the world's glaciers document changes in the ice, while satellite photographs show glaciers flowing and retreating in Greenland and South Georgia. Old photos of were compared with recent images to reveal how glaciers are being reshaped.

Some of the locations – and animals – presented their own filming challenges, such as the Pallas's cat. Known as the world's grumpiest cat because of its stern expression, it has the densest fur of any feline and its paws are sensitive to cold. To film one in action in Mongolia, the production team had to sit as still and quietly as possible in wooden hides for up to eight hours a day in temperatures so low that their sandwiches froze solid.

For the Frozen Peaks episode, the team visited such far-flung regions as Mount Kenya, Patagonia, the Southern Alps of New Zealand and the Italian Alps, where a pair of golden eagles were filmed working together to make a successful kill of a chamois goat – the first time two of the raptors have been filmed hunting cooperatively.

Of course, there are lighter moments, too, including footage of the quirky hooded seal. The males have extraordinary inflatable noses that produce a bright red balloon sac out of a nostril, a feat which is apparently very popular with the females.

And for a real "aww" moment, watch out for the Atlantic walrus that demonstrates an adorable way of getting himself into the cool water – by performing an impressive roly-poly into the sea.

James and Helen tie the knot

A new chapter

It's wedding bells for James and Helen as the heart-warming series returns

ALL CREATURES GREAT AND SMALL
Thursday, 9pm, Channel 5

NICHOLAS RALPH (James Herriot)

James and Helen are getting married. Can you reveal anything about the wedding? I can't say too much, however, what I can say is that when I read the scripts, I was smiling like a Cheshire cat from start to finish. Not only is it everything you'd hope it would be – romantic and touching in parts – but it's also very funny.

How is Tricki Woo this season?

Tricki's back, still grunting and commenting on cue and speaking back to Patricia Hodge's Mrs Pumphrey and Patricia is ad-libbing little things back to his grumbles. He does it on cue. He's so quiet when he's off camera and then when he's required, and Patricia starts speaking to him, he starts grumbling. He's incredible.

Tricki Woo

CALLUM WOODHOUSE (Tristan Farnon)

Will Tristan find romance this series? He's seen how James and Helen are with each other, and seen their beautiful relationship together, and I think he's jealous. Jealous in a sort of affectionate way. He's happy for James, but I think he wants a bit of that sort of love and affection.

Is it true you use fake animals for some of the vet scenes? We film wide shots with real animals and then for the close-up shots we have prosthetics and they're always so perfectly made. The woman who makes them all makes dead bodies for police dramas. She took this job for a bit of a change, so like, "I usually do dead bodies, but let me try the back end of a cow!" She's amazing.

Mrs Hall with Tristan

RACHEL SHENTON (Helen Alderson)

How is newly married life for Helen? She's a farmer's daughter and a worker. She moves into a house where [housekeeper] Mrs Hall does everything and Helen is used to doing the cooking and cleaning. So it's tricky.

Is the impending war a worry for her?

Helen's of the mindset that it will all be over by Christmas, as a lot of people were, and she doesn't think it will amount to anything. She is reassured by the fact that James is in a reserved occupation and her dad's not going to get called.

Prepare to escape to the country as All Creatures Great And Small transports us to the Yorkshire Dales for a third series of animal adventures, romance and family life.

The new series picks up in spring 1939 as veterinarian James Herriot and fiancée Helen are preparing to marry. And that's not the only change for the residents of Skeldale House. At the end of the last series Tristan qualified as a vet, and his new role is sure to spark more clashes with older brother Siegfried.

The vets also have to deal with new challenges, such as the introduction of tuberculosis testing for the locals' cows, which is met with opposition from the farmers, as well as the looming threat of another world war.

Here, co-stars Nicholas Ralph, Callum Woodhouse and Rachel Shenton chat about fake cows, James and Helen's new life, and the true star of the show, pampered Pekingese Tricki Woo...

End of the Week

Comedian Dara Ó Briain prepares to bow out with the final series

MOCK THE WEEK
Friday, 10pm, BBC Two

After 17 years, 21 series and more than 200 episodes, we can't quite believe that Mock The Week is coming to an end.

At the helm of every one of those episodes has been Dara Ó Briain, 50, who has had us in stitches over the years as he and a panel of his comedy pals rip apart the week's news.

With this week seeing the first episode of the final series, we caught up with the comedian, who is part way through an international stand-up tour, to reminisce about the show and hear about his future plans...

Hi, Dara. What will you miss when Mock The Week ends?

Filming took 11 evenings out of my year, so basically it was broadcast far more often than it was recorded. Most of my year is spent on my own, doing shows. You don't often get time to spend with other comics and that's probably the greatest thing that I'll miss about it.

break, the Ninja Warrior UK contest is tougher than ever, with contenders racing for the first time against an elite team of professional ninja athletes.

Here, Rochelle and Chris tell us why the thrills will come thick and fast this year and why they're not fazed by the return of rival show Gladiators...

Amputee Mat hits the course

Hi, guys. What can we expect?

Rochelle: We start off every episode with a race and if you make it up the warped wall the fastest you get through to the second round and compete against one of our elite ninjas. Then there's a whole world of pain. I've been wanting a women's race – now there are two separate competitions and the same obstacles. It's so empowering.

What is the stand-out moment of the series?

Rochelle: Mat Armitage was involved in a serious motorbike accident and is now an amputee. He is the first amputee to make it up the warped wall. There wasn't a dry eye in the house. I did my voice-over for it and was crying in the booth.

Chris: When it's aired it will go viral and Mat will be a star.

How do you feel about the return of Gladiators?

Chris: I'm like, "Great, it's an iconic show." But we've had some Gladiators on Ninja and they didn't do very well.

Rochelle: So we'll just leave that there shall we...

Are there any plans for a celebrity version?

Chris: We've got two actors from Emmerdale who run the course. We can't tell you who.

Rochelle: We don't do a celebrity edition. If you want to come down you've got to take part with everybody else. I've been told we had some celebs who applied but they didn't make the cut. They have to have a level of fitness to be able to take on a fair race.

Which celebrity would you like to see on the show?

Rochelle: Davina McCall loves the show and she is Miss Fitness. I think she would be unbelievable – and we've got a women's race.

Did you ever imagine it would last as long as it has?

No, you never presume those kinds of things. The early shows have, like, nine rounds and I used to do nothing other than press the buzzer and hand out points. It became a much more relaxed show in the later parts and much more enjoyable.

Is it hard to come up with new things to say about people like Boris Johnson?

Boris is a bit like Trump in a sense, he's kind of a self-parody. Someone once said Trump was a boon to bad comics but was no use to good comics because the joke is already there.

Who are the guests?

I have no idea. The producers are delightful but they are total control freaks – they'd never let me make suggestions. Ed Byrne isn't on the show because he is my friend. It's because they saw him doing a best man speech at my wedding and thought, "Well, he's funny, he should come on the show."

What is your best memory of working with Hugh Dennis?

When Hugh did the Bond movie

Dara and regular guest Hugh and it ended up being an entire episode about Hugh's character in No Time To Die. I think he got killed off-camera and we [came up with] various back stories about his character, and the gorgeous thing was the huge shining moment in a long and successful career was 30 seconds in a Bond movie where he got shot off-screen. We were very happy that happened.

Do you have any plans to return to TV when Mock The Week finally ends?

The exciting part of a comedian's journey is where you move to the beat of being young and new. Then you do TV, then you go off into the TV wilderness as I'm about to, and then you pop up again as a national treasure in about 20 years. That's the long game here.

The Suspect
9pm, ITV

Last week, you may recall, we advised Dr Joe O'Loughlin, Aidan Turner's character in this ITV murder mystery, to stop looking quite so shifty and haunted. All it does is reinforce the police's suspicions. If the expression he's adopted here is his response to our advice, maybe it's best he ignores us henceforth.

To fall for

Get in the mood for autumn with comforting seasonal recipes

Aldo Zilli

Buongiorno readers! This week we have some autumnal recipes that make good use of all the wonderful produce around at this time of year. I love walking down to my apple, pear and fig orchard. Figs with honey and prosciutto are a big favourite at Casa Zilli.

I'm a huge fan of homemade soup, too – it's perfect for a quick and healthy lunch and is really cost effective. Try this roasted sweet potato and butternut squash soup, served with a chunk of homemade bread and butter.

If you fancy a treat but don't bake much, the simple spiced apple and raisin loaf on page 57 ticks all the boxes. It's so easy and perfect for using up any leftover apples you may have.

Sure to bring a lovely pop of colour to your table, the heritage tomato tart is a real eye-catcher, and great for a weekend lunch with friends.

Heritage tomato tart

- ★ 1 fresh garlic clove, crushed
- ★ ½ tbsp olive oil
- ★ ½ tbsp balsamic vinegar
- ★ 3 tbsp passata
- ★ 2 tbsp sun-dried tomatoes, roughly chopped
- ★ 200g puff pastry dough
- ★ 1 egg, beaten
- ★ 300g mixed heritage tomatoes, sliced
- ★ 100g feta cheese, crumbled
- ★ A handful of basil leaves, to garnish

METHOD

1. Preheat the oven to 200°C/180°C fan/gas mark 6.
2. In a small bowl, combine the garlic, olive oil, balsamic vinegar, passata and chopped sun-dried tomatoes. Set aside.
3. Roll out the puff pastry on a floured surface until the thickness is roughly 5mm.

4. Cut out a circle of the rolled-out pastry – about the size of a large dinner plate is perfect.
5. Put the pastry circle on some parchment paper and lay it flat on a baking sheet. This will help you add the filling.
6. Spoon a thin layer of the sun-dried tomato and passata sauce over the puff pastry, leaving a 3cm border of the crust untouched.
7. Brush the pastry border with beaten egg.
8. Top with the tomatoes and feta cheese.
9. Bake for about 30 to 35 minutes until the pastry is golden, the tomatoes are cooked and the feta is beginning to turn golden.
10. Remove from the oven and cool slightly. Scatter over basil leaves before serving.

The trial

A mother visits court to see her daughter's tormentor face justice – but does someone else deserve punishment? By Nilopar Uddin

The three of you pull up to the court and not one of you notices the rain clapping at the window like little iron fists.

As you drag yourselves through the security queue, you're aware that Zoya is blinking excessively, a nervous tic that has been exacerbated by the stress of the past few days. The grey severity of this building terrified Zoya from the start and the terror has only mounted. Sean hasn't noticed the blinking or the way his teenage daughter clings to you, but you are her mother. You're a package that has been hurriedly put together but is bursting at the seams with an acute alertness and an assortment of guilts, the ugliest of which is that you have instigated this moment. As you empty the contents of your handbag into a tray, Zoya's angst mauls at you.

You notice Maria's parents standing by Youth Courtroom 6. A stinging shame rises through your chest and you turn quickly away to greet the solicitor. You sense Zoya wanting to hold your hand and you reach for her.

You've always sensed her needs – it's an awareness you've carried since she was born, when your breasts would sting and leak moments before she cried for her feeds. When she had nightmares, you would be beside her bed even before she called out for you. Instincts that were futile when Zoya needed you most.

"What's a referral order?" Sean is asking the solicitor, and you envy how nonchalantly he rocks on his toes as he speaks. Your ex-husband has mastered the art of travelling light through life, carrying the least amount of baggage because you carry the brunt. He checked out of this family years ago and is making a guest appearance, a supporting role, for your daughter.

"Zoya's mum's always been a bit self-absorbed, a bit not-all-there." Sean would have complained to his new wife, and you worry he's right – that if you hadn't been so preoccupied with getting promoted, you might have noticed the signs earlier.

As you take your seat beside her, Zoya reaches for you again, leans into you and whispers, "I love you, Ma." She whispers these words frequently into your ears, is lavish with her affection for you. And yet the obscene words in those Snapchat messages – how could such profanities be used against such a sweet child? It had filled you with rage.

You could have dealt with it differently. You had liked Maria, given her lifts to the football practices the girls shared when they were younger and encouraged Zoya to befriend her, convinced they had much in common. But then they became teens and those lewd images of your child on Snapchat captioned with those awful taunts shocked you to the core, and when the school didn't put an end to it, you became desperate, turning up at Maria's home, voice pitched soprano with rage. It only made matters worse, and Zoya called you from the school toilets begging you to make it stop, and you in turn called the school, begging them to make it stop. You are an actuary, solving problems, thinking strategically day in and day out, but the best you can think of to protect your child is to fantasise about squeezing her back inside you as the only place you can keep her safe.

The lawyers disappear into Youth Courtroom 6 and the three of you wait, Sean scrolling on his phone and Zoya blinking rapidly beside you. You slip into the awed silence and try to imagine what the magistrate might be saying at that very moment. Punish her, you mentally beseech him. Punish me too. Zoya squeezes your hand and you smile reassuringly at her, the picture of calm.

But where was your composure when you were chasing Maria down that alleyway while your drenched daughter hyperventilated on the wet grass?

When the door opens, Maria walks in with her parents and suddenly you don't recognise her as the malicious girl who spat in your face when you screamed, "How can you do that to my baby?" This girl is just a child, too.

When she looks up, Maria looks at you; not at Zoya, but you. You recognise the fear in her eyes because it resembles the fear in Zoya's eyes over the past four months of this ordeal. You've become to Maria what Maria was to Zoya. You shake your head to avoid thinking the word, but it forms in your mind regardless like an animated thought bubble: Bully.

The solicitor explains that as part of the Referral Order, the magistrate has ordered Maria's parents to compensate all her victims, including Zoya.

"No!" you say, thinking of how you didn't stop chasing until you wrenched that petrol can out of Maria's hands.

They look at you in surprise, including Zoya who frowns but continues to cling to your arm. You suddenly want to shake her the way you shook Maria; she poured a can of petrol over you and threatened to blow you up, you wanted to shout, why didn't you stand up for yourself?

What if you hadn't decided last minute to pick Zoya up from school that day? What if you hadn't slowed for a traffic light and spotted them at the end of the alleyway? You remember the sloshing of the liquid splashing over Zoya as you ran toward them, tentative eruptions of "No!" emitted from the depths of your shock. You remember how, when Maria ran away, giving chase felt incredibly liberating! You had been a single mum for seven years – had been the only carer and confidant to your awkward and vulnerable child – and for a few moments you ran free of it all toward the tyrant. And then when you reached Maria, you grabbed her. "It's just water," Maria had gasped, "I was just joking," but it was too late, because something had been unleashed in you.

You were a demented woman whose only child had been soaked in petrol ready to be set alight like a brown Guy Fawkes. You slapped her hard across the face.

The solicitor was still talking. He seems to have taken your reaction as one of outrage that the sentence was not harsh enough. You open your mouth to explain that it wasn't right what you did – you've never raised a finger to your own child – but suddenly you feel Zoya lean into you and whisper, "It's OK, Ma."

The three of you walk out of the courtroom but only Sean walks taller, vindicated by the outcome. Zoya blinks hard as she clings to your arm and your heart shrinks deep into the pit of you.

Daisy Payne

Gardening guru Daisy, 25, has become This Morning viewers' go-to expert on green-fingered matters. Here, she fills us in on being part of the show and what she tunes in to when she's not working Hi, Daisy. What do you like watching on TV?

I know I'm late to the party but I've started This Is Us, which is amazing. I'm laughing and crying. I've moved into a new cottage and everything is still in boxes because I'm obsessed, I'm watching it all the time.

What else do you tune in to?

I love watching sports. I really got into Wimbledon and the Commonwealth Games. And I've watched Emily In Paris so many times.

If you could have a cameo in a TV show, what would it be?

I'd love to be in a soap. Maybe I could make my Coronation Street debut, or give gardening tips on Emmerdale!

Where did your love of gardening come from?

It started when I bought my first house. I'd never had a garden before so it was a challenge that I took on – and I loved it. I felt like there was so much I should be sharing with people who needed simple, accessible and relatable tips. My posts got really popular on Instagram and YouTube.

And then This Morning noticed you...

The bosses at This Morning saw me on Instagram and a few weeks later I was getting to do what I do on Instagram on national telly. It was such a mad feeling. I'm just a normal girl who loves gardening.

Are you still pinching yourself?

I have had moments where I've thought, "Has that just happened?" It is a bit mad. I'm loving it.

Have Holly Willoughby, Phillip Schofield and the This Morning gang asked for gardening tips?

They haven't yet, but when I'm in the studio, Phillip asks about his sunflowers and other plants. There's a good family vibe that's so lovely to be part of.

Have you been starstruck by anyone you've met?

I met Alan Titchmarsh and it was a real moment. I was like, "Oh my God, he knows who I am!"
